Hudibras,

By

Samuel Butler;

With Notes by

The Rev. Treadway Rusel Nash, D.D.

A New Edition Illustrated.

Volume I.

London:

Henry Washbourne, New Bridge Street,
Blackfriars.

MDCCCXLVII.
HUDIBRAS.

BY

SAM'l BUTLER.
LITTLE or no apology need be offered to the Public for presenting it with a new edition of Hudibras; the poem ranks too high in English literature not to be welcomed if it appear in a correct text, legible type, and on good paper: ever since its first appearance it has been as a mirror in which an Englishman might have seen his face without becoming, Narcissus-like, enamoured of it; such an honest looking-glass must ever be valuable, if there be worth in the aphorism of nosce teipsum. May it not in the present times be as useful as in any that are past? Perhaps even in this enlightened age a little self-examination may be wholesome; a man will take a glance of recognition of himself if there be a glass in the room, and it may happen that some indication of the nascent symptoms of the wrinkles of treason, of the crows-feet of fanaticism, of the drawn-down mouth of hypocrisy, or of the superfluous hairs of self-conceit may startle the till then unconscious possessor of such germs of vice, and afford to his honester qualities an opportunity of stifling them ere they start forth in their native hideousness, and so, perchance, help to avert the repetition of the evil times the poet satirizes, which, in whatever point they are viewed, stand a blot in the annals of Britain.

ADVERTISEMENT.

edited by Dr. Nash * in 1793, has become a book of high price and uncommon occurrence. It may justly be called a scholar's edition, although the Editor thus modestly speaks of his annotations: "The principal, if not the sole view, of the annotations now offered to the public, hath been to remove these difficulties, (fluctuations of language, disuse of customs, &c.) and point out some of the passages in the Greek and Roman authors to which the poet alludes, in order to render Hudibras more intelligible to persons of the commentator's level, men of middling capacity, and limited information. To such, if his remarks shall be found useful and acceptable, he will be content, though they should appear trifling in the estimation of the more learned."

To some few of the notes explanatory of phrases and words, the printer has ventured to make trifling additions, which he has placed within brackets that they may not be supposed to be Dr. Nash's, though had the excellent dictionary of the late venerable Archdeacon Todd, and the Glossary of the late Arch-

* "January 26, 1811.—At his seat at Bevere, near Worcester, in his 86th year, Treadway Russel Nash, D.D., F.S.A., Rector of Leigh. He was of Worcester College in Oxford; M. A. 1746 B. and D. D. 1758. He was the venerable Father of the Magistracy of the County of Worcester: of which he was an upright and judicious member nearly 50 years; and a gentleman of profound erudition and critical knowledge in the several branches of literature: particularly the History of his native county, which he illustrated with indefatigable labour and expense to himself. In exemplary prudence, moderation, affability, and unostentatious manner of living, he has left no superior; of the truth of which remark the writer of this article could produce abundant proof from a personal intercourse of long continuance; and which he sincerely laments has now an end.—R." Gentleman's Magazine.
deacon Nares, from which they are principally taken, been in existence in 1793 there can be little doubt but Dr. Nash would have availed himself of them.

Dr. Nash has largely used the notes of Dr. Grey and his friends, as he himself states at page xxxi of the following life of Butler, so frequently indeed as to render acknowledgement in every case superfluous.

W. N.

Butler's Monument, St. Paul's, Covent Garden.
To mandate faith's services were definitive.
BUTLER'S TENEMENT.

Wor. Henshall, Worcestershire.
ON

SAMUEL BUTLER, Esq.,

AUTHOR OF HUDIBRAS.

The life of a retired scholar can furnish but little matter to the biographer: such was the character of Mr. Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras. His father whose name likewise was Samuel, had an estate of his own of about ten pounds yearly, which still goes by the name of Butler's tenement, he held likewise, an estate of three hundred pounds a year under sir William Russel, lord of the manor of Strensham, in Worcestershire.* He was not an ignorant farmer, but wrote a very clerk-like hand, kept the register, and managed all the business of the parish under the direction of his landlord, near whose house he lived, and from whom, very probably, he and his family received instruction and assistance. From his landlord they imbibed their principles of loyalty, as sir William was a most zealous royalist, and spent great part of his fortune in the cause, being the only person exempted from the

* This information came from Mr. Gresley, rector of Strensham, from the year 1706 to the year 1773, when he died, aged 100: so that he was born seven years before the poet died.
benefit of the treaty, when Worcester surrendered to the parliament in the year 1646. Our poet’s father was churchwarden of the parish the year before his son Samuel was born, and has entered his baptism, dated February 8, 1612, with his own hand, in the parish register. He had four sons and three daughters; born at Strensham; the three daughters, and one son older than our poet, and two sons younger: none of his descendants remain in the parish, though some of them are said to be in the neighbouring villages.

Our author received his first rudiments of learning at home; he was afterwards sent to the college school at Worcester, then taught by Mr. Henry Bright,* pre-

* Mr. Bright is buried in the cathedral church of Worcester, near the north pillar, at the foot of the steps which lead to the choir. He was born 1562, appointed schoolmaster 1586, made prebendary 1619, died 1626. The inscription in capitals, on a mural stone, now placed in what is called the Bishop’s Chapel, is as follows:

Mane hospe s et lege,
Magister HENRICUS BRIGHT,
Celeberrimus gymnasiarcha,
Qui scholæ regiæ istic fundatæ per totos 40 annos
summa cum laude praefuit,
Quo non alter magis sedulus fuit, scitusve, ac dexter, in Latinis Græcis Hebraicis litteris, feliciter edocendis:
Teste utraque academia quam instruxit affatim
numerosa plebe literaria:
Sed et totdem annis coque amplius theologiam professus,
Et hujus ecclesiae per septennium canonicals major,
Sæpissime hic et alibi sacrum dei præconem magno cum zelo et fructu egit.
Vir pius, doctus, integer, frugi, de republica dque ecclesiam optime meritus.
A laboribus per diu noctuque ab anno 1562
ad 1626 strenue usque exantlatis 40 Martii suaviter requievit in Domino.

See this epitaph, written by Dr. Joseph Hall, dean of Worcester, in Fuller’s Worthies, p. 177.
bendary of that cathedral, a celebrated scholar, and many years the famous master of the King's school there; one who made his business his delight; and, though in very easy circumstances, continued to teach for the sake of doing good, by benefiting the families of the neighbouring gentlemen, who thought themselves happy in having their sons instructed by him.

How long Mr. Butler continued under his care is not known, but, probably, till he was fourteen years old. Whether he was ever entered at any university is uncertain. His biographer says he went to Cambridge, but was never matriculated: Wood, on the authority of Butler's brother, says, the poet spent six or seven years there; * but as other things are quoted from the same authority, which I believe to be false, I should very much suspect the truth of this article. Some expressions, in his works, look as if he were acquainted with the customs of Oxford. Coursing was a term peculiar to that university; see Part iii. c. ii. v. 1244.

Returning to his native country, he entered into the service of Thomas Jefferies, Esq., of Earls Croombe,

I have endeavoured to revive the memory of this great and good teacher, wishing to excite a laudable emulation in our provincial schoolmasters; a race of men, who, if they execute their trust with abilities, industry, and in a proper manner, deserve the highest honour and patronage their country can bestow, as they have an opportunity of communicating learning, at a moderate expence, to the middle rank of gentry, without the danger of ruining their fortunes, and corrupting their morals or their health: this, though foreign to my present purpose, the respect and affection I bear to my neighbours extorted from me.

* His residing in the neighbourhood might, perhaps, occasion the idea of his having been at Cambridge.
ON SAMUEL BUTLER, Esq.

who, being a very active justice of the peace, and a leading man in the business of the province; his clerk was in no mean office, but one that required a knowledge of the law and constitution of his country, and a proper behaviour to men of every rank and occupation; besides, in those times, before the roads were made good, and short visits so much in fashion, every large family was a community within itself: the upper servants, or retainers, being often the younger sons of gentlemen, were treated as friends, and the whole family dined in one common hall, and had a lecturer or clerk, who, during meal times, read to them some useful or entertaining book.

Mr. Jeffries's family was of this sort, situated in a retired part of the country, surrounded by bad roads, the master of it residing constantly in Worcestershire. Here Mr. Butler had the advantage of living some time in the neighbourhood of his own family and friends: and having leisure for indulging his inclinations for learning, he probably improved himself very much, not only in the abastruser branches of it, but in the polite arts: here he studied painting, in the practice of which indeed his proficiency was but moderate; for I recollect seeing at Earls Croombe in my youth, some portraits said to be painted by him, which did him no great honour as an artist.* I have heard,

* In his MS. Common-place book is the following observation:

It is more difficult, and requires a greater mastery of art in painting, to foreshorten a figure exactly, than to draw three at their just length; so it is, in writing, to express any thing naturally and briefly, than to enlarge and dilate:

And therefore a judicious author's blots
Are more ingenious than his first free thoughts.
SAMUEL LUNÉ'S HOUSE.
Veni Exspecto, Petacunxene.
Author of Hudibras.

Lately, of a portrait of Oliver Cromwell, said to be painted by our author.

After continuing some time in this service, he was recommended to Elizabeth Countess of Kent, who lived at Wrest, in Bedfordshire. Here he enjoyed a literary retreat during great part of the civil wars, and here probably laid the groundwork of his Hudibras, as he had the benefit of a good collection of books, and the society of that living library, the learned Selden. His biographers say, he lived also in the service of Sir Samuel Luke, of Cople Hoo Farm, or Wood End, in that county, and that from him he drew the character of Hudibras: * but such a prototype was not rare in those times. We hear little more of Mr. Butler till after the Restoration: perhaps, as Mr. Selden was left executor to the Countess, his employment in her affairs might not cease at her death, though one might suspect by Butler's MSS. and Remains, that his friendship with that great man was not without interruption, for his satirical wit could not be restrained from displaying itself on some particularities in the character of that eminent scholar.

This, and many other passages from Butler's MSS. are inserted, not so much for their intrinsic merit, as to please those who are unwilling to lose one drop of that immortal man; as Garrick says of Shakespeare:

It is my pride, my joy, my only plan,
To lose no drop of that immortal man.

* The Lukes were an ancient family at Cople, three miles south of Bedford: in the church are many monuments to the family: an old one to the memory of sir Walter Luke knight, one of the justices of the pleas, holden before the most excellent prince King Henry the Eighth, and dame Anne his wife; another in remembrance of Nicholas Luke, and his wife, with five sons and four daughters.
Lord Dorset is said to have first introduced Hudibras to court. November 11, 1662, the author obtained an imprimatur, signed J. Berkenhead, for printing his poem; accordingly in the following year he published the first part, containing 125 pages. Sir Roger L'Estrange granted an imprimatur for the second part of Hudibras, by the author of the first, November 5, 1663, and it was printed by T. R. for John Martin, 1664.

In the Mercurius aulicus, a ministerial newspaper, from January 1, to January 8, 1662, quarto, is an advertisement saying, that "there is stolen abroad a "most false and imperfect copy of a poem called "Hudibras, without name either of printer or bookseller, the true and perfect edition, printed by the "author's original, is sold by Richard Marriott, near "St. Dunstan's Church, in Fleet-street, that other "nameless impression is a cheat, and will but abuse "the buyer, as well as the author, whose poem "deserves to have fallen into better hands." Probably many other editions were soon after printed: but the first and second parts, with notes to both parts, were printed for J. Martin and H. Herringham, octavo, 1674. The last edition of the third part, before the

On a flat stone in the chancel is written,
Here lieth the body of George Luke, Esq. he departed this life Feb. 10, 1732, aged 74 years, the last Luke of Wood End.
Sir Samuel Luke was a rigid presbyterian, and not an eminent commander under Oliver Cromwell; probably did not approve of the king's trial and execution, and therefore, with other presbyterians, both he and his father Sir Oliver were among the secluded members. See Rushworth's collections.
author's death, was printed by the same persons in 1678: this I take to be the last copy corrected by himself, and is that from which this edition is in general printed; the third part had no notes put to it during the author's life, and who furnished them after his death is not known.

In the British Museum is the original injunction by authority, signed John Berkenhead, forbidding any printer, or other person whatsoever to print Hudibras, or any part thereof, without the consent or approbation of Samuel Butler (or Boteler), Esq.* or his assignees, given at Whitehall, 10th September, 1677; copy of this injunction may be seen in the note. †

It was natural to suppose, that after the restoration, and the publication of his Hudibras, our poet should have appeared in public life, and have been rewarded for the eminent service his poem did to the royal cause; but his innate modesty, and studious turn of mind, prevented solicitations: never having tasted the idle luxuries of life, he did not make to himself needless wants, or pine after imaginary pleasures: his fortune, indeed, was small, and so was his ambition; his integrity of life, and modest temper, rendered him contented. However, there is good authority for believing that at one time he was gratified with an order on the treasury for 300l. which is said to have passed all the offices without payment

* Induced by this injunction, and by the office he held as secretary to Richard earl of Carbury, lord president of Wales, I have ventured to call our poet Samuel Butler, Esq.
† CHARLES R.

Our will and pleasure is, and we do hereby strictly charge and command, that no printer, bookseller, stationer or other person whatsoever within our kingdom of England or Ireland, do print, reprint, utter or of fees, and this gave him an opportunity of displaying his disinterested integrity, by conveying the entire sum immediately to a friend, in trust for the use of his creditors. Dr. Zachary Pearce,* on the authority of Mr. Lowndes of the Treasury, asserts, that Mr. Butler received from Charles the second an annual pension of 100l.: add to this, he was appointed secretary to the lord president of the principality of Wales, and, about the year 1667, steward of Ludlow castle. With all this, the court was thought to have been guilty of a glaring neglect in his case, and the public were scandalized at the ingratitude. The indigent poets, who have always claimed a prescriptive right to live on the munificence of their contemporaries, were the loudest in their remonstrances. Dryden, Oldham, and Otway, while in appearance they complained of the unrewarded merits of our author, obliquely lamented their private and particular grievances: Πάτροκλον προφασίν, σφόν δ' αὐτῶν κύδε' ἐκατος; † or, as Sallust says, nulli mortalium injuriæ sue parvae videntur. Mr. Butler’s own sense of the disappointment, and the impression sell, or cause to be printed, re-printed, uttered or sold, a book or poem called Hudibras, or any part thereof, without the consent and approbation of Samuel Boteler, Esq. or his assignees, as they and every of them will answer the contrary at their perils. Given at our Court at Whitehall, the tenth day of September, in the year of our Lord God 1677, and in the 29th year of our reign.

By his Majesty’s command,

Jo. BERKENHEAD.

Plut. 11. J. original,

† Homer—Iliad, xix. 302.
it made on his spirits, are sufficiently marked by the circumstance of his having twice transcribed the following distich with some variation in his MS. common-place book:

To think how Spenser died, how Cowley mourn'd,
How Butler's faith and service were return'd. *

In the same MS. he says, "wit is very chargeable, "and not to be maintained in its necessary ex"penses at an ordinary rate: it is the worst trade in "the world to live upon, and a commodity that no "man thinks he has need of, for those who have least "believe they have most."

—— Ingenuity and wit
   Do only make the owners fit
   For nothing, but to be undone
   Much easier than if th' had none.

Mr. Butler spent some time in France, probably when Lewis XIV. was in the height of his glory and vanity: however, neither the language nor manners of Paris were pleasing to our modest poet; some of his observations may be amusing, I shall therefore insert them in a note. † He married Mrs. Herbert, whether she was a widow, or not, is uncertain; with her he expected a considerable fortune, but, through

* I am aware of a difficulty that may be started, that the Tragedy of Constantine the Great, to which Otway wrote the prologue, according to Giles Jacob in his poetical Register, was not acted at the Theatre Royal till 1684, four years after our poet's death, but probably he had seen the MS. or heard the thought, as both his MSS. differ somewhat from the printed copy.

† "The French use so many words, upon all occasions, that if they did not cut them short in pronunciation, they would grow tedious, and insufferable.
various losses, and knavery, he found himself disappointed: to this some have attributed his severe strictures upon the professors of the law; but if his censures be properly considered, they will be found

"They infinitely affect rhyme, though it becomes their language the worst in the world, and spoils the little sense they have to make room for it, and make the same syllable rhyme to itself, which is worse than metal upon metal in heraldry: they find it much easier to write plays in verse than in prose, for it is much harder to imitate nature, than any deviation from her; and prose requires a more proper and natural sense and expression than verse, that has something in the stamp and coin to answer for the alloy and want of intrinsic value. I never came among them, but the following line was in my mind:

Raucaque garrulitas, studiumque inane loquendi;
for they talk so much, they have not time to think; and if they had all the wit in the world, their tongues would run before it.

"The present king of France is building a most stately triumphal arch in memory of his victories, and the great actions which he has performed: but, if I am not mistaken, those edifices which bear that name at Rome, were not raised by the emperors whose names they bear (such as Trajan, Titus, &c.) but were decreed by the Senate, and built at the expense of the public; for that glory is lost, which any man designs to consecrate to himself.

"The king takes a very good course to weaken the city of Paris by adorning of it, and to render it less, by making it appear greater and more glorious; for he pulls down whole streets to make room for his palaces and public structures.

"There is nothing great or magnificent in all the country, that I have seen, but the buildings and furniture of the king's houses and the churches; all the rest is mean and paltry.

"The king is necessitated to lay heavy taxes upon his subjects in his own defence, and to keep them poor, in order to keep them quiet; for if they are suffered to enjoy any plenty, they are naturally so insolent, that they would become ungovernable, and use him as they have done his predecessors: but he has rendered himself so strong, that they have no thoughts of attempting any thing in his time.

"The churchmen overlook all other people as haughtily as the churches and steeples do private houses.

"The French do nothing without ostentation, and the king himself is not behind with his triumphal arches consecrated to himself, and his impress of the sun, nec pluribus impar."
to bear hard only upon the disgraceful part of each profession, and upon false learning in general: this was a favourite subject with him, but no man had a greater regard for, or was a better judge of the worthy part of the three learned professions, or learning in general, than Mr. Butler.

How long he continued in office, as steward of Ludlow Castle, is not known, but he lived the latter part of his life in Rose-street, Covent Garden, in a studious retired manner, and died there in the year 1680.—He is said to have been buried at the expence of Mr. William Longueville, though he did not die in debt.

Some of his friends wished to have interred him in Westminster Abbey with proper solemnity; but not finding others willing to contribute to the expence, his corpse was deposited privately in the yard belonging to the church of Saint Paul's Covent Garden, at the west end of the said yard, on the north side, under the wall of the said church, and under that wall which parts the yard from the common highway.* I have been thus particular, because, in the year 1786, when the church was repaired, a marble monument was placed on the south side of the church on the inside, by some of the parishioners, which might

* See Butler's Life, printed before the small edition of Hudibras in 1710, and reprinted by Dr. Grey. tend to mislead posterity as to the place of his interment; their zeal for the memory of the learned poet does them honour: but the writer of the verses seems to have mistaken the character of Mr. Butler. The inscription runs thus,

"This little monument was erected in the year "1786, by some of the parishioners of Covent Garden, in memory of the celebrated Samuel Butler, who was buried in this church, A. D. 1680.

"A few plain men, to pomp and state unknown,
"O'er a poor bard have rais'd this humble stone,
"Whose wants alone his genius could surpass,
"Victim of zeal! the matchless Hudibras!
"What though fair freedom suffer'd in his page,
"Reader, forgive the author for the age!
"How few, alas! disdain to cringe and cant,
"When 'tis the mode to play the sycophant.
"But, oh! let all be taught, from Butler's fate,
"Who hope to make their fortunes by the great,
"That wit and pride are always dangerous things,
"And little faith is due to courts and kings."

In the year 1721, John Barber, an eminent printer, and alderman of London, erected a monument to our poet in Westminster Abbey, the inscription is as follows;

M. S.
Samuelis Butler
Qui Strenshamiae in agro Vigorn. natus 1612, Obiit Lond. 1680.
Vir doctus imprimis, acer, integer,
Operibus ingenii non item præmiis felix.
Satyrici apud nos carminis artifex egregius,
Qui simulæ religionis larvarum detraxit
Et perduellium scelera liberrime exagitavit,
Scriptorum in suo genere primus et postremus.
Ne cui vivo deere fere omnia
Deesset etiam mortuo tumulus
Hoc tandem posito marmore curavit
Johannes Barber civis Londinensis 1721
On the latter part of this epitaph the ingenious Mr. Samuel Wesley wrote the following lines:

While Butler, needy wretch, was yet alive,
No generous patron would a dinner give;
See him, when starv'd to death, and turn'd to dust,
Presented with a monumental bust.
The poet's fate is here in emblem shown,
He ask'd for bread, and he received a stone.

Soon after this monument was erected in Westminster Abbey, some persons proposed to erect one in Covent Garden church, for which Mr. Dennis wrote the following inscription:

Near this place lies interr'd
The body of Mr. Samuel Butler,
   Author of Hudibras.
He was a whole species of poets in one:
Admirable in a manner
In which no one else has been tolerable:
A manner which begun and ended in him,
In which he knew no guide,
And has found no followers.
   Nat. 1612.  Ob. 1680.

Hudibras is Mr. Butler's capital work, and though the characters, poems, thoughts, &c. published by Mr. Thyer, in two volumes octavo, are certainly wrote by the same masterly hand, though they abound with lively sallies of wit, and display a copious variety of erudition, yet the nature of the subjects, their not having received the author's last corrections, and many other reasons which might be given, render them less acceptable to the present taste of the public, which no longer relishes the antiquated mode of writing characters, cultivated when Butler was young, by men of genius, such as Bishop Earle and Mr. Cleveland; the volumes, however, are very useful, as they tend to illustrate many passages in Hudibras. The three small ones entitled, Posthumous Works, in Prose and Verse, by Mr. Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras, printed 1715, 1716, 1717, are all spurious, except the Pindaric ode on Duval the highwayman, and perhaps one or two of the prose pieces. As to the MSS. which after Mr. Butler's death came into the hands of Mr. Longueville, and from whence Mr. Thyer published his genuine Remains in the year 1759; what remain of them, still unpublished, are either in the hands of the ingenious Doctor Farmer, of Cambridge, or myself: for Mr. Butler's Common-place Book, mentioned by Mr. Thyer, I am indebted to the liberal and public spirited James Massey, Esq. of Rosthern, near Knotsford, Cheshire. The poet's frequent and correct use of law terms * is a sufficient proof that he was well versed in that science; but if further evidence were wanting, I can produce a MS. purchased of some of our poet's relations, at the Hay, in Brecknockshire: it appears to be a collection of legal cases and principles, regularly related from Lord Coke's Commentary on Littleton's Tenures: the language is Norman, or law French, and, in general, an abridgment of the above-mentioned celebrated work; for the authorities in the margin of the MS. correspond exactly with those given on the same positions in the first institute; and the subject matter contained in each particular section of Butler's legal tract, is to be found in the same numbered section of

* Butler is said to have been a member of Gray's-inn, and of a club with Cleveland and other wits inclined to the royal cause.
Coke upon Littleton: the first book of the MS. likewise ends with the 84th section, which same number of sections also terminates the first institute; and the second book of the MS. is entitled by Butler, Le second livre del primer part del institutes de ley d'Engleterre. The titles of the respective chapters of the MS. also precisely agree with the titles of each chapter in Coke upon Littleton; it may, therefore, reasonably be presumed to have been compiled by Butler solely from Coke upon Littleton, with no other object than to impress strongly on his mind the sense of that author; and written in Norman, to familiarize himself with the barbarous language in which the learning of the common law of England was at that period almost uniformly expressed. The MS. is imperfect, no title existing, some leaves being torn, and is continued only to the 193d section, which is about the middle of Coke's second book of the first institute.

As another instance of the poet's great industry, I have a French dictionary, compiled and transcribed by him: thus did our ancestors, with great labour, draw truth and learning out of deep wells, whereas our modern scholars only skim the surface, and pilfer a superficial knowledge from encyclopædias and reviews. It doth not appear that he ever wrote for the stage, though I have, in his MS. Common-place book, part of an unfinished tragedy, entitled Nero.

Concerning Hudibras there is but one sentiment—it is universally allowed to be the first and last poem of its kind; the learning, wit, and humour, certainly stand unrivalled: various have been the attempts to define or describe the two last; the greatest English writers have tried in vain, Cowley, * Barrow, † Dryden, ‡ Lock, § Addison, || Pope, ¶ and Congreve, all failed in their attempts; perhaps they are more to be felt than explained, and to be understood rather from example than precept: if any one wishes to know what wit and humour are, let him read Hudibras with attention, he will there see them displayed in the brightest colours: there is lustre resulting from the quick elucidation of an object, by a just and unexpected arrangement of it with another subject: propriety of words, and thoughts elegantly adapted to the occasion: objects which possess an affinity and congruity, or sometimes a contrast to each other, assembled with quickness and variety; in short, every ingredient of wit, or of humour, which critics have discovered on dissecting them, may be found in this poem. The reader may congratulate himself, that he is not destitute of taste to relish both, if he can read it with delight; nor would it be presumption to transfer to this capital author, Quinctilian's enthusiastic praise of a great Antient: hunc igitur spectemus, hoc propositum sit nobis exemplum, ille se profecisse sciat cui Cicero valde placebit.

Hudibras is to an epic poem, what a good farce is to a tragedy; persons advanced in years generally prefer the former, having met with tragedies enough

* In his Ode on Wit, — † in his Sermon against foolish talking and Jesting, — ‡ in his Preface to an Opera called the State of Innocence,— § Essay on human understanding, b. ii c. 2.—|| Spectator, No. 35 and 32.— ¶ Essay concerning humour in Comedy, and Corbyn Morris's Essay on Wit, Humour, and Raillery.
in real life; whereas the comedy, or interlude, is a relief from anxious and disgusting reflections, and suggests such playful ideas, as wanton round the heart and enliven the very features.

The hero marches out in search of adventures, to suppress those sports, and punish those trivial offences, which the vulgar among the royalists were fond of, but which the presbyterians and independents abhorred; and which our hero, as a magistrate of the former persuasion, thought it his duty officially to suppress. The diction is that of burlesque poetry, painting low and mean persons and things in pompous language, and a magnificent manner, or sometimes levelling sublime and pompous passages to the standard of low imagery. The principal actions of the poem are four: Hudibras's victory over Crowdero—Trulla's victory over Hudibras—Hudibras's victory over Sidrophel—and the Widow's antimasquerade: the rest is made up of the adventures of the Bear, of the Skimmington, Hudibras's conversations with the Lawyer and Sidrophel, and his long disputations with Ralpho and the Widow. The verse consists of eight syllables, or four feet, a measure which, in unskilful hands, soon becomes tiresome, and will ever be a dangerous snare to meaner and less masterly imitators.

The Scotch, the Irish, the American Hudibras, are not worth mentioning; the translation into French, by an Englishman, is curious, it preserves the sense, but cannot keep up the humour. Prior seems to have come nearest the original, though he is sensible of his own inferiority, and says,

But, like poor Andrew, I advance,
False mimic of my master's dance;
His Alma is neat and elegant, and his versification superior to Butler's; but his learning, knowledge, and wit, by no means equal. Prior, as Dr. Johnson says, had not Butler's exuberance of matter, and variety of illustration. The spangles of wit which he could afford, he knew how to polish, but he wanted the bullion of his master. Hudibras, then, may truly be said to be the first and last satire of the kind; for if we examine Lucian's Tragopodagra, and other dialogues, the Cæsars of Julian, Seneca's Apocolocyntosis, * and some fragments of Varro, they will be found very different: the battle of the frogs and mice, commonly ascribed to Homer, and the Margites, generally allowed to be his, prove this species of poetry to be of great antiquity.

The inventor of the modern mock heroic was Alessandro Tassoni, born at Modena 1565. His Secchia rapita, or Rape of the Bucket, is founded on the popular account of the cause of the civil war between the inhabitants of Modena and Bologna, in the time of Frederic II. This bucket was long preserved, as a trophy, in the cathedral of Modena, suspended by the chain which fastened the gate of Bologna, through which the Modenese forced their passage, and seized the

---

* Or the mock deification of Claudius; a burlesque of Apotheosis or Anathanatosis. Reimarus renders it, non inter deos sed inter fatuos relatio, and quotes a proverb from Apuleius, Colocyntae caput, for a fool. Colocynta is metaphorically put for any thing unusually large. λήμας κολοκύντας in the Clouds of Aristophanes, is to have the eye swelled by an obstruction as big as a gourd.
prize. It is written in the ottava rima, the solemn measure of the Italian heroic poets, has gone through many editions, and been twice translated into French: it has, indeed, considerable merit, though the reader will scarcely see Elena trasformasi in una secchia. Tassoni travelled into Spain as first secretary to Cardinal Colonna, and died, in an advanced age, in the court of Francis the First, duke of Modena: he was highly esteemed for his abilities and extensive learning; but, like Mr. Butler’s, his wit was applauded, and unrewarded, as appears from a portrait of him, with a fig in his hand, under which is written the following distich:

Dextera cur sicum quaeris mea gestat inanem,
Longi operis merces haec fuit, Aula dedit.

The next successful imitators of the mock-heroic, have been Boileau, Garth, and Pope, whose respective works are too generally known, and too justly admired, to require, at this time, description or encomium. The Pucelle d’Orleans of Voltaire may be deemed an imitation of Hudibras, and is written in somewhat the same metre; but the latter, upon the whole, must be considered as an original species of poetry, a composition sui generis.

Unde nil majus generatur ipso;
Nec viget quidquam simile aut secundum.

Hudibras has been compared to the Satyre Menippée de la vertu du Catholicon d’Espagne, first published in France in the year 1593; the subject indeed is somewhat similar, a violent civil war excited by religious zeal, and many good men made the dupes of state politicians. After the death of Henry III. of France, the Duke de Mayence called together the states of the kingdom, to elect a successor, there being many pretenders to the crown; these intrigues were the foundation of the Satire of Menippée, so called from Menippus a cynic philosopher, and rough satirist, introducer of the burlesque species of dialogue. In this work are unveiled the different views, and interests of the several actors in those busy scenes, who, under the pretense of public good, consulted only their private advantage, passions and prejudices.

The book, which aims particularly at the Spanish party,* went through various editions, from its first

* It is sometimes called Higuero del infierno, or the fig-tree of Hell, alluding to the violent part the Spaniards took in the civil wars of France, and in allusion to the title of Seneca's Apocolysis. By this fig-tree the author perhaps means the wonderful bir or banian described by Milton.

The fig-tree, not that kind for fruit renown'd,
But such as at this day to Indians known
In Malabar or Decan, spreads his arms,
Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow
About the mother tree; a pillar'd shade
High over-arch'd, and echoing walks between.

Mr. Ives, in his Journey from Persia, thus speaks of this wonderful vegetable: "This is the Indian sacred tree, it grows to a prodigious height, and its branches spread a great way. The limbs drop down fibrous, which take root, and become another tree, united by its branches to the first, and so continue to do, until the tree cover a great extent of ground; the arches which those different stocks make are Gothic, like those we see in Westminster Abbey, the stocks not being single, but appearing as if composed of many stocks, are of a great circumference. There is a certain solemnity accompanying these trees, nor do I remember that I was ever under the cover of any of them, but that my mind was at the time impressed with a reverential awe." From hence it seems, that both these authors thought Gothic architecture similar to embowered rows of trees.

The Indian fig-tree is described as of an immense size, capable of shading 800 or 1000 men, and some of them 3000 persons. In Mr. Marsden's History of Sumatra, the following is an account of the di-publication to 1726, when it was printed at Ratisbone in three volumes, with copious notes and index: it is still studied by antiquaries with delight, and in its day was as much admired as Hudibras. D'Aubigné says of it, il passe pour un chef d'œuvre en son gendre, et fut lue avec une egale avidité, et avec un plaisir mervelleux par les royalistes, par les politiques, par les Huguenots et par les ligueurs de toutes les especes.*

M. de Thou's character of it is equally to its advantage. The principal author is said to be Monsieur le Roy, sometime chaplain to the Cardinal de Bourbon, whom Thuanus calls vir bonus, et a factione summè alienus.

This satire differs widely from our author's: like those of Varro, Seneca and Julian, it is a mixture of verse and prose, and though it contains much wit, and Mr. Butler had certainly read it with attention, yet he cannot be said to imitate it; the reader will perceive that our poet had in view Don Quixote, Spenser, the Italian poets, together with the Greek and Roman classics; but very rarely, if ever, alludes to Milton, though Paradise Lost was published ten years before the third part of Hudibras.

Other sorts of burlesque have been published, such as the carmina Macaronica, the epistolæ obscurarum mensions of a remarkable banyan tree near Banjer, twenty miles west of Patna, in Bengal. Diameter 363 to 375 feet, circumference of its shadow at noon 1116 feet, circumference of the several stems (in number 50 or 60) 911 feet.

* Henault says of this work, Peut-être que la satire Menippée ne fut guères moins utile à Henri IV. que la bataille d'ivri: le ridicule a plus de force qu'on ne croit.
Virorum, Cotton's Travesty, &c., but these are efforts of genius of no great importance. Many burlesque and satirical poems, and prose compositions, were published in France between the year 1593 and 1660, the authors of which were Rabelais, * Scarron and others; the Cardinal is said to have severely felt the Mazarinade.

A popular song or poem has always had a wonderful effect: the following is an excellent one from Æschylus, sung at the battle of Salamis, at which he was present, and engaged in the Athenian Squadron.

—— ἌΩ παιδες Ἐλλήνων ἵτε, ἔλευθεροὺτε πατρίδ', ἔλευθεροὺτε δὲ παῖδας, γυναῖκας, Θεῶν τε πατρῴων ἔδη, θήκασ τε προγόνων' νῦν ύπέρ πάνων ἀγών.

Æsch. Persæ, l. 400.

The ode of Callistratus is supposed to have done eminent service, by commemorating the delivery, and preventing the return of that tyranny in Athens, which was happily terminated by the death of Hipparchus, and expulsion of the Pisistratidae; I mean a song which was sung at their feasts beginning,

Ἐν μύρτου κλαδὶ τὸ ξίφος φορήσω, δῶσῃ Αρμοδίος κ' Αριστογείτων, ὅτε τὸν τύραννον κτανέτην, ἰσονύμους τ' Ἀθήνας ἐποιησάτην.

And ending,

Ἄξι σφών κλέος ἐσσεται κατ' αἰαν, φιλτυθ' Αρμόδιε κ' Αριστόγειτον, ὅτι τὸν τύραννον κτάνετον ἰσονύμους τ' Ἀθήνας ἐποιήσατον.

* [Probably a misprint. Rabelais died in 1553, and his work was first published at Lyons in 1533.]
Of this song the learned Lowth says, Si post idus Martias e Tyrannoctonis quispiam tale aliquod carmen plebi tradidisset, inque suburram, et fori circulos, et in ora vulgi intulisset, actum profecto fuisset de partibus deque nominatione Cæsarum: plus mehercule valuisset unum Ἀρμοδίου μέλος quam Ciceronis Philippicæ omnes; and again, Num verendum erat ne quis tyrannidem Pisistratidarum Athenis instaurare auderet, ubi cantitaretur Σκόλιον illud Callistrati.—See also Israelitarum Επικινν, Isaiah, chapter xiv.

Of this kind was the famous Irish song called Liliburlero, which just before the Revolution in 1688, had such an effect, that Burnet says, “a foolish ballad was made at that time, treating the papists and chiefly the Irish, in a very ridiculous manner, which had a burthen said to be Irish words, Loro loro liliburlero, that made an impression on the (king’s) army that cannot be imagined by those that saw it not. The whole army, and at last the people, both in city and country, were singing it perpetually; and perhaps never had so slight a thing so good an effect.”

Of this kind in modern days was the song of God save great George our King, and the Ça ira of Paris. Thus wonderfully did Hudibras operate in beating down the hypocrisy, and false patriotism of his time. Mr. Hayley gives a character of him in four lines with great propriety:

“Unrivall’d Butler! blest with happy skill
To heal by comic verse each serious ill,
By wit’s strong flashes reason’s light dispense,
And laugh a frantic nation into sense.”

For one great object of our poet’s satire is to unmask the hypocrite, and to exhibit, in a light at once odious and ridiculous, the presbyterians and independents, and all other sects, which in our poet's days amounted to near two hundred, and were enemies to the King; but his further view was to banter all the false, and even all the suspicious pretences to learning that prevailed in his time, such as astrology, sympathetic medicine, alchymy, transfusion of blood, trifling experimental philosophy, fortune-telling, incredible relations of travellers, false wit and injudicious affectation of ornament to be found in the poets, romance writers, &c., thus he frequently alludes to Purchas's Pilgrim, Sir Kenelm Digby's books, Bulwer's Artificial Changeling, Brown's Vulgar Errors, Burton's Melancholy, the early transactions of the Royal Society, the various pamphlets and poems of his time, &c. &c. These books, though now little known, were much read and admired in our author's days. The adventure with the widow is introduced in conformity with other poets, both heroic and dramatic, who hold that no poem can be perfect which hath not at least one Episode of Love.

It is not worth while to enquire, if the characters painted under the fictitious names of Hudibras, Crowdero, Orsin, Talgol, Trulla, &c. were drawn from real life, or whether Sir Roger L'Estrange's key to Hudibras be a true one, it matters not whether the hero were designed as the picture of Sir Samuel Luke, Col. Rolls, or Sir Henry Rosewell, he is, in the language of Dryden, knight of the Shire, and represents them all, that is, the whole body of the presbyterians, as Ralphe does that of the independents; it would be degrading the liberal spirit, and universal genius of Mr. Butler, to narrow his general satire to a particular libel on any characters, however marked and prominent. To a single rogue, or blockhead, he disdained to stoop; the vices and follies of the age in which he lived, (et quando uberior vitiorum copia) were the quarry at which he fled; these he concentrated, and embodied in the persons of Hudibras, Ralpho, Sidrophel, &c. so that each character in this admirable poem should be considered, not as an individual, but as a species.

It is not generally known, that meanings still more remote and chimerical than mere personal allusions, have been discovered in Hudibras; and the poem would have wanted one of those marks which distinguish works of superior merit, if it had not been supposed to be a perpetual allegory: writers of eminence, Homer, Plato, and even the holy Scriptures themselves, have been most wretchedly misrepresented by commentators of this cast; and it is astonishing to observe to what a degree Heraclides* and Proclus,†

* The Allegorie Howerice, Gr. Lat. published by Dean Gale, Amst. 1688, though usually ascribed to Heraclides Ponticus, the Platonist, must be the work of a more recent author, as the Dean has proved: his real name seems to have been Heraclitus (not the philosopher), and nothing more is known of him, but that Eustathius often cites him in his comment on Homer: the tract, however, is elegant and agreeable, and may be read with improvement and pleasure.

† Proclus, the most learned philosopher of the fifth century, left among other writings numerous comments on Plato's works still subsisting, so stuffed with allegorical absurdities, that few who have perused two periods, will have patience to venture on a third. In this, he only follows the example of Atticus, and many others, whose interpretations, as wild as his own, he carefully examines. He sneers at the famous Longinus with much contempt, for adhering too servilely to the literal meaning of Plato.
Philo* and Origen, have lost sight of their usual good sense, when they have allowed themselves to depart from the obvious and literal meaning of the text, which they pretend to explain. Thus some have thought that the hero of the piece was intended to represent the parliament, especially that part of it which favoured the presbyterian discipline; when in the stocks, he personates the presbyterians after they had lost their power; his first exploit is against the bear, whom he routs, which represents the parliament getting the better of the king; after this great victory, he courts a widow for her jointure, that is, the riches and power of the kingdom; being scorned by her, he retires, but the revival of hope to the royalists draws forth both him, and his squire, a little before Sir George Booth's insurrection. Magnano, Cerdon, Talgos, &c. though described as butchers, coblers, tinkers, were designed as officers in the parliament army, whose original professions, perhaps, were not much more noble: some have imagined Magnano to be the duke of Albemarle, and his getting thistles from a barren land, to allude to his power in Scotland, especially after the defeat of Booth. Trulla his wife, Crowdero Sir George Booth, whose bringing in of Bruin alludes to his endeavours to restore the king: his oaken leg, called the better one, is the king's cause, his other leg the presbyterian discipline; his fiddle-case, which in sport they hung as a trophy on the whipping-post, the directory. Ralpхо, they say, represents the parliament of independents, called Barebone’s Parliament; Bruin is sometimes the royal person, sometimes the king’s adherents: Orsin represents the royal party—Talgol the city of London—Colon the bulk of the people: all these joining together against the knight, represent Sir George Booth’s conspiracy, with presbyterians and royalists, against the parliament: their overthrow, through the assistance of Ralph, means the defeat of Booth by the assistance of the independents and other fanatics. These ideas are, perhaps, only the frenzy of a wild imagination, though there may be some lines that seem to favour the conceit.

* Philo the Jew, discovered many mystical senses in the Pentateuch, and from him, perhaps, Origen learned his unhappy knack of allegorizing both Old and New Testament. This, in justice, however, is due to Origen, that while he is hunting after abstruse senses, he doth not neglect the literal, but is sometimes happy in his criticisms.

Dryden and Addison have censured Butler for his double rhymes; the latter no where argues worse than upon this subject; “If,” says he, “the thought in the “couplet be good, the rhymes add little to it; and if “bad, it will not be in the power of rhyme to recom-“mend it; I am afraid that great numbers of those “who admire the incomparable Hudibras, do it more “on account of these doggrel rhymes, than the parts “that really deserve admiration.”* This reflection affects equally all sorts of rhyme, which certainly can add nothing to the sense; but double rhymes are like the whimsical dress of Harlequin, which does not add to his wit, but sometimes encreases the humour and drollery of it: they are not sought for, but, when they come easily, are always diverting: they are so seldom found in Hudibras, as hardly to be an object of censure, especially as the diction and the rhyme both suit well with the character of the hero.

* Spectator, No. 60.

It must be allowed that our poet doth not exhibit his hero with the dignity of Cervantes; but the principal fault of the poem is, that the parts are unconnected, and the story not interesting; the reader may leave off without being anxious for the fate of his hero; he sees only disjecti membra poetæ; but we should remember, that the parts were published at long intervals* and that several of the different cantos were designed as satires on different subjects or extravagancies.

What the judicious Abbé du Bos has said respecting Ariosto, may be true of Butler, that, in comparison with him, Homer is a geometrician: the poem is seldom read a second time, often not a first in regular order; that is, by passing from the first canto to the second, and so on in succession. Spenser, Ariosto, and Butler, did not live in an age of planning; the last imitated the former poets—"his poetry is the careless "exuberance of a witty imagination and great learning."

Fault has likewise been found, and perhaps justly, with the too frequent elisions, the harshness of the numbers, and the leaving out the signs of our substantives: his inattention to grammar and syntax, which, in some passages, may have contributed to obscure his meaning, as the perplexity of others arises from the amazing fruitfulness of his imagination, and extent of his reading. Most writers have more words than ideas, and the reader wastes much pains with them, and gets little information or amusement. Butler,

---

* The Epistle to Sidrophel, not till many years after the canto to which it is annexed.
on the contrary, has more ideas than words, his wit and learning crowd so fast upon him, that he cannot find room or time to arrange them: hence his periods become sometimes embarrassed and obscure, and his dialogues are too long. Our poet has been charged with obscenity, evil-speaking, and profaneness; but satirists will take liberties. Juvenal, and that elegant poet Horace, must plead his cause, so far as the accusation is well founded.

Some apology may be necessary, or expected, when a person advanced in years, and without the proper qualifications, shall undertake to publish, and comment upon, one of the most learned and ingenious writers in our language; and, if the editor's true and obvious motives will not avail to excuse him, he must plead guilty. The frequent pleasure and amusement he had received from the perusal of the poem, naturally bred a respect for the memory and character of the author, which is further endeared to him, by a local relation to the county, and to the parish, so highly honoured by the birth of Mr. Butler. These considerations induced him to attempt an edition, more pompous perhaps, and expensive, than was necessary, but not too splendid for the merit of the work. While Shakespeare, Milton, Waller, Pope, and the rest of our English classics, appear with every advantage that either printing or criticism can supply, why should not Hudibras share those ornaments at least with them which may be derived from the present improved state of typography and paper? Some of the dark allusions, in Hudibras, to history, voyages, and the abstruser parts of what was then called learning, the author himself was careful to explain, in a series of notes to the two first parts; for the annotations to the third part, as has been before observed, do not seem to come from the same hand. In most other respects, the poem may be presumed to have been tolerably clear to the ordinary class of readers at its first publication: but, in a course of years, the unavoidable fluctuations of language, the disuse of customs then familiar, and the oblivion which hath stolen on facts and characters then commonly known, have superinduced an obscurity on several passages of the work, which did not originally belong to it. The principal, if not the sole view, of the annotations now offered to the public, hath been to remove these difficulties, and point out some of the passages in the Greek and Roman authors to which the poet alludes, in order to render Hudibras more intelligible to persons of the commentator's level, men of middling capacity, and limited information. To such, if his remarks shall be found useful and acceptable, he will be content, though they should appear trivial in the estimation of the more learned.

It is extraordinary, that for above an hundred and twenty years, only one commentator hath furnished notes of any considerable length. Doctor Grey had various friends, particularly Bishop Warburton, Mr. Byron and several gentlemen of Cambridge, who communicated to him learned and ingenious observations; these have been occasionally adopted without scruple, have been abridged, or enlarged, or altered, as best consisted with a plan, somewhat different from the doctor's; but in such a manner as to preclude any other than a general acknowledgement from the infinite perplexity that a minute and particular reference to them, at every turn, would occasion; nor has the editor been without the assistance of his friends.
BISHOP WARBURTON

From a series painted by Cuthbert.

It is well known in Worcestershire, that long before the appearance of Doctor Grey's edition, a learned and worthy clergyman of that county, after reading Hudibras with attention, had compiled a set of observations, with design to reprint the poem, and to subjoin his own remarks. By the friendship of his descendants, the present publisher hath been favoured with a sight of those papers, and though, in commenting on the same work, the annotator must unavoidably have co-incident with, and been anticipated by Doctor Grey in numerous instances, yet much original information remained, of which a free and unreserved use hath been made in the following sheets; but he is forbid any further acknowledgment.

He is likewise much obliged to Doctor Loveday, of Williamscot, near Banbury, the worthy son of a worthy father; the abilities and correctness of the former can be equalled only by the learning and critical acumen of the latter. He begs leave likewise to take this opportunity of returning his thanks to his learned and worthy neighbour Mr. Ingram, from whose conversation much information and entertainment has been received on many subjects.

Mr. Samuel Westley, brother to the celebrated John Westley, had a design of publishing an edition of Hudibras with notes. He applied to Lord Oxford for the use of his books in his library, and his Lordship wrote him the following obliging answer from Dover-street, August 7, 1734. "I am very glad you was reduced "to read over Hudibras three times with care: I find
"you are perfectly of my mind, that it much wants
"notes, and that it will be a great work; certainly it "will be, to do it as it should be. I do not know one
"so capable of doing it as yourself. I speak this very "sincerely. Lilly's life I have, and any books that I "have you shall see and have the perusal of them, and "any other part that I can assist. I own I am very fond "of the work, and it would be of excellent use and en"tertainment.

"The news you read in the papers of a match with
"my daughter and the Duke of Portland was com"pleted at Mary-le-bonne chapel," &c.*

What progress he made in the work, or what became of his notes, I could never learn.

LIST OF PORTRAITS, &c. OF CELEBRATED POLITICAL AND LITERARY CHARACTERS, IMPOSTORS, ENTHUSIASTS, &c. ALLUDED TO IN HUDIBRAS.

Engraved by Cooper.

Samuel Butler, to face Title, Vol. I.

Charles II. to face Title, Vol. II.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Albertus Magnus</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>438</td>
<td>193</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bacon, Roger</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>224</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Behmen, Jacob</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>542</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blanc, Vincent le</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>282</td>
<td>71</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bonner, Bishop</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>510</td>
<td>243</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Booker, John</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>173</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brahe, Tycho</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>120</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burton, Henry</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>1122</td>
<td>157</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Byfield, Adoniram</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>640</td>
<td>177</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calamy, Edmund</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>636</td>
<td>176</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cardan, Jerome</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>895</td>
<td>49</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Case, Thomas</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>581</td>
<td>87</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>160</td>
<td>227</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooke, John</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1550</td>
<td>219</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Copernicus, Nicholas</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>882</td>
<td>48</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cromwell, Oliver</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>216</td>
<td>154</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cromwell, Richard</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>231</td>
<td>157</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cutpurse, Mall</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>368</td>
<td>77</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Davenant, Sir William</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>395</td>
<td>78</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dee, Dr. John</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>235</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Desborough, General</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>270</td>
<td>158</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Digby, Sir Kenelm</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>227</td>
<td>69</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dunstan, St.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>618</td>
<td>33</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Essex, Robert, Earl of</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>166</td>
<td>227</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fairfax, Sir Thomas</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1200</td>
<td>204</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fleetwood, General</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>270</td>
<td>158</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Author</td>
<td>Part.</td>
<td>Canto</td>
<td>Line</td>
<td>Page</td>
<td>Vol.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------</td>
<td>-------</td>
<td>-------</td>
<td>------</td>
<td>------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fludd, Robert</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>541</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Goodwin, Dr. Thomas</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>669</td>
<td>249</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Helmont, Baptist Van</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>220</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henderson, Alexander</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1239</td>
<td>206</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hewson, Colonel</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1250</td>
<td>207</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hopkins, the Witch-Finder</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>140</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joan, Pope</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Lady's Answer</td>
<td>283</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joan of Arc</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Lady's Answer</td>
<td>285</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John of Leyden</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>246</td>
<td>157</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kelly, Edward</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>630</td>
<td>34</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kircher, Athanasius</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1585</td>
<td>221</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lambert, General</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>270</td>
<td>158</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lenthal, William</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>909</td>
<td>190</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lilburn, John</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>421</td>
<td>167</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lilly, William</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>1093</td>
<td>58</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love, Christopher</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1263</td>
<td>208</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loyola, Ignatius</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1564</td>
<td>220</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lunsford, Sir Thomas</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>1112</td>
<td>199</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luther, Martin</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>155</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Machiavelli, Niccolo</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>1313</td>
<td>127</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montaigne</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>38</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Napier of Merchiston</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>409</td>
<td>166</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Owen, Dr. John</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>638</td>
<td>176</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paracelsus</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>299</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prymne, William</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>646</td>
<td>41</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ross, Alexander</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>57</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scaliger</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>881</td>
<td>48</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shaftesbury, Earl of</td>
<td>III.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>351</td>
<td>164</td>
<td>II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Waller, Sir William</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>499</td>
<td>85</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White, Thomas</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>II.</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>220</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Withers, George</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>I.</td>
<td>646</td>
<td>41</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Warburton, Bishop</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Preface</td>
<td>xxx.</td>
<td>I.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Butler's Tenement to face Life, Vol. I.

LIST OF THE WOOD CUTS,

Designed by Thurston.

VOL I.

VIGNETTE ON TITLE.

Hughes.

Then did Sir Knight abandon dwelling,
And out he rode a colonelling.—
A Squire he had, whose name was Ralph,
That in th' adventure went his half.

ENGRAVED TITLE. HEAD OF HUDIBRAS. Thompson.

Thus was he gifted and accouter'd,—
His tawny beard was th' equal grace
Both of his wisdom and his face;
In cut and dye so like a tile,
A sudden view it would beguile:—
His puissant sword unto his side,
Near his undaunted heart, was ty'd,
With basket-hilt, that would hold broth,
And serve for fight and dinner both.—
— he was of that stubborn crew
Of errant saints, whom all men grant
To be the true church militant:
Such as do build their faith upon
The holy text of pike and gun.

HEAD PIECE, PART I. CANTO I.

White.

When Gospel-Trumpeter, surrounded
With long-ear'd rout, to battle sounded,
And pulpit, drum ecclesiastick,
Was beat with fist, instead of a stick.

HEAD PIECE, PART I. CANTO II.

Thompson.

And wing'd with speed and fury flew
To rescue Knight from black and blue.
Which ere he could atchieve, his sconce
The leg encounter'd twice and once;
And now 'twas rais'd, to smite agen,
When Ralpho thrust himself between.
Tail Piece, Part I. Canto II.

Crowdero making doleful face,
Like hermit poor in pensive place,
To dungeon they the wretch commit,
And the survivor of his feet.

Head Piece, Part I. Canto III.

When setting ope the postern gate,
To take the field and sally at,
The foe appear'd, drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field.

Head Piece, Part II. Canto I.

she went
To find the Knight in limbo pent.
And was not long before she found
Him, and his stout Squire, in the pound.

Tail Piece, Part II. Canto I.

——— a tall long-sided dame,
But wond'rous light—ycleped Fame,—
Upon her shoulders wings she wears
Like hanging sleeves, lin'd thro' with ears,
And eyes, and tongues,—
With letters hung, like eastern pigeons,—
Two trumpets she does sound at once,
But both of clean contrary tones.

Head Piece, Part II. Canto II.

With that he seized upon his blade;
And Ralpho too, as quick and bold,
Upon his basket-hilt laid hold.

Tail Piece, Part II. Canto II.

—— quitting both their swords and reins,
They grasp'd with all their strength the manes;
And, to avoid the foe's pursuit,
With spurring put their cattle to't.
The dogs beat you at Brentford Fair;
Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fop-doodle.

Hudibras, to all appearing,
Believ'd him to be dead as herring.
He held it now no longer safe,
To tarry the return of Ralph,
But rather leave him in the lurch.

This Sidrophel by chance espy'd,
And with amazement staring wide:
Bless us, quoth he, what dreadful wonder
Is that appears in heaven yonder?

Sidrophel perusing Hudibras' Epistle.

Gimeracks, whims, and jiggumbobs.

He wonder'd how she came to know
What he had done, and meant to do;
Held up his affidavit hand,
As if he 'ad been to be arraign'd.

H' attack'd the window, storm'd the glass,
And in a moment gain'd the pass;
Thro which he dragg'd the worsted soldier's
Four-quarters out by th' head and shoulders.
Head Piece, Part III. Canto II.  Thompson.

Knights, citizens, and burgesses—
Held forth by rumps—of pigs and geese,—
Each bonfire is a funeral pile,
In which they roast, and scorch, and broil.

Tail Piece, Part III. Canto II.  Thompson.

— crowded on with so much haste,
Until they 'd block'd the passage fast,
And barricado'd it with haunches
Of outward men, and bulks and paunches.

Head Piece, Part III. Canto III.  Hughes.

To this brave man the Knight repairs
For counsel in his law-affairs,—
To whom the Knight, with comely grace,
Put off his hat to put his case.

Tail Piece, Part III. Canto III.  Byfield.

With books and money plac'd for shew
Like nest-eggs to make clients lay.

Head Piece to the Epistle to the Lady.  Byfield.

— having pump'd up all his wit,
And humm'd upon it, thus he writ.

Tail Piece to the Epistle to the Lady.  Byfield.

What tender sigh, and trickling tear,
Longs for a thousand pounds a year;
And languishing transports are fond
Of statute, mortgage, bill, and bond.

Head Piece to the Lady's Answer.  Thompson.

She open'd it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout.

Tail Piece to the Lady's Answer.  Branston.
HUDIBRAS.

PART I. CANTO I.
THE ARGUMENT.

Sir Hudibras¹ his passing worth,
The manner how he sally'd forth;
His arms and equipage are shewn;
His horse's virtues and his own.
Th' adventure of the bear and fiddle
Is sung, but breaks off in the middle.²

¹ Butler probably took this name from Spencer's Fairy Queen. B. ii. C. ii, St. 17.

He that made love unto the eldest dame
Was hight Sir Hudibras, an hardy man;
Yet not so good of deeds, as great of name,
Which he by many rash adventures wan,
Since errant arms to sew he first began.

Geoffry of Monmouth mentions a British king of this name, though some have supposed it derived from the French, Hugo, Hu de Bras, signifying Hugh the powerful, or with the strong arm: thus Fortinbras, Firebras.

In the Grub-street Journal, Col. Rolls, a Devonshire gentleman is said to be satirized under the character of Hudibras; and it is asserted, that Hugh de Bras was the name of the old tutelar saint of that county; but it is idle to look for personal reflexions in a poem designed for a general satire on hypocrisy, enthusiasm, and false learning.

² Bishop Warburton observes very justly, that this is a ridicule on Ronsard's Franciade, and Sir William Davenant's Gondibert.
When civil fury first grew high,
And men fell out, they knew not why;^

---

1 In the first edition of the first part of this poem, printed separately, we read dudgeon. But on the publication of the second part, when the first was reprinted with several additions and alterations, the word dudgeon was changed to fury; as appears in a copy corrected by the author's own hand. The publisher in 1704, and the subsequent ones, have taken the liberty of correcting the author's copy, restored the word dudgeon, and many other readings: changing them, I think I may say, for the worse, in several passages. Indeed, while the Editor of 1704 replaces this word, and contends for it, he seems to shew its impropriety. "To " take in dudgeon," says he, "is inwardly to resent, a sort of grumbling " in the gizzard, and what was previous to actual fury." Yet in the next lines we have men falling out, set together by the ears, and fighting. I doubt not but the inconsistency of these expressions occurred to the author, and induced him to change the word, that his sense might be clear, and the aera of his poem certain and uniform. — Dudgeon, in its primitive sense, signifies a dagger; and figuratively, such hatred and sullenness as occasion men to employ short concealed weapons. Some readers may be fond of the word dudgeon, as a burlesque term, and suitable, as they think, to the nature of the poem: but the judicious critic will observe, that the poet is not always in a drolling humour, and might not think fit to fall into it in the first line: he chooses his words not by the oddness or uncouthness of the sound, but by the propriety of
When hard words, jealousies, and fears,¹
Set folks together by the ears, their signification. Besides, the word dudgeon, in the figurative sense, though not in its primitive one, is generally taken for a monoptote in the ablative case, to take in dudgeon, which might be another reason why the poet changed it into fury. See line 379.

Dr. Perrinchei's Life of Charles I. says, "There will never be "wanting in any country some discontented spirits, and some designing "craftsmen; but when these confusions began, the more part knew "not wherefore they were come together."

_Hard words—_Probably the jargon and cant-words used by the Presbyterians, and other sectaries. They call themselves the elect, the saints, the predestinated: and their opponents they called Papists, Prelatists, ill-designing, reprobate, profligate, &c. &c.

"In the body politic, when the spiritual and windy power moveth the "members of a commonwealth, and by strange and hard words suffo-"cates their understanding, it must needs thereby distract the people, "and either overwhelm the commonwealth with oppression, or cast it into "the fire of a civil war." Hobbes.

_Jealousies—_Bishop Burnet, in the house of lords, on the first article of the impeachment of Sacheverel, says, "The true occasion of the war was "a jealousy, that a conduct of fifteen years had given too much ground "for; and that was still kept up by a fatal train of errors in every step." See also the king's speech, Dec. 2, 1641.

_And fears—_Of superstition and Popery in the church, and of arbitrary power and tyranny in the state: and so prepossessed were many persons with these fears, that, like the hero of this poem, they would imagine a bear-baiting to be a deep design against the religion and liberty of the country. Lord Clarendon tells us, that the English were the happiest people under the sun, while the king was undisturbed in the administration of justice; but a too much felicity had made them unmanageable by moderate government; a long peace having softened almost all the noblesse into court pleasures, and made the commoners insolent by great plenty.

King Charles, in the fourth year of his reign, tells the lords, "We have "been willing so far to descend to the desires of our good subjects, as "fully to satisfy all moderate minds, and free them from all just fears "and jealousies." The words jealousies and fears were bandied between the king and parliament in all their papers, before the absolute breaking out of the war. They were used by the parliament to the king, in their petition for the militia, March 1, 1641-2; and by the king in his answer, "You speak of jealousies and fears, lay your hands to your hearts and "ask yourselves, whether I may not be disturbed with jealousies and "fears." And the parliament, in their declaration to the king at Newmarket, March 9, say, "Those fears and jealousies of ours which your "Majesty thinks to be causeless, and without just ground, do necessa-"rily and clearly arise from those dangers and distempers into which "your evil councils have brought us: but those other fears and jealousies of yours, have no foundation or subsistence in any action, inten-"tion, or miscarriage of ours, but are merely grounded on falsehood "and malice."

The terms had been used before by the Earl of Carlisle to James I.
And made them fight, like mad or drunk,
For dame Religion as for Punk;¹
Whose honesty they all durst swear for,
Tho' not a man of them knew wherefore:
When Gospel-Trumpeter, surrounded
With long-ear'd² rout, to battle sounded,
And pulpit, drum ecclesiastick,
Was beat with fist, instead of a stick ;³

14 Feb. 1623. "Nothing will more dishearten the envious maligners
" of your Majesty’s felicity, and encourage your true hearted friends
" and servants, than the removing those false fears, and jealousies, which
" are mere imaginary phantasms, and bodies of air easily dissipated,
" wh enseover it shall please the sun of your majesty to shew itself
" clearly in its native brightness, lustre, and goodness."

¹ Punk—From the Anglo-Saxon pung, it signifies a bawd, Anus
instar corii ad ignem siccati. (Skinner.) Sometimes scortum, scortillum.
Sir John Suckling says,
Religion now is a young mistress here
For which each man will fight and die at least:
Let it alone awhile, and 'twill become
A kind of married wife; people will be Content to live with it in quietness.

² Mr. Butler told Thomas Veal esquire, of Simons-hall, Gloucestershire, that the Puritans had a custom of putting their hands behind their ears, at sermons, and bending them forward, under pretence of hearing the better. He had seen five hundred or a thousand large ears pricked up as soon as the text was named. Besides, they wore their hair very short, which shewed their ears the more. See Godwin’s notes in Bodley Library.

Dr. Bulwer in his Anthropometamorphosis, or Artificial Changeling, tells us wonderful stories of the size of men’s ears in some countries.—
Pliny lib. 7. c. 2. speaks of a people on the borders of India, who covered themselves with their ears. And Purchas, in his Pilgrim, saith, that in the Island Arucetto, there are men and women having ears of such bigness, that they lie upon one as a bed, and cover themselves with the other.

I here mention the idle tales of these authors, because their works, together with Brown’s Vulgar Errors, are the frequent object of our poet’s satire.

³ It is sufficiently known from the history of those times, that the seeds of rebellion were first sown, and afterwards cultivated, by the factious preachers in conventicles, and the seditious and schismatical lecturers, who had crept into many churches, especially about London,
" These men," says Lord Clarendon, " had, from the beginning of the " parliament, infused seditious inclinations into the hearts of all men,
" against the government in church and state; but after the raising an " army, and rejecting the king’s overtures for peace, they contained
" themselves within no bounds, but filled all the pulps with alarms of " ruin and destruction, if a peace were offered or accepted." These
Then did Sir Knight abandon dwelling,
And out he rode a colonelling. 1

A Wight he was, 2 whose very sight wou’d
Entitle him Mirror of Knighthood; 3
That never bent his stubborn knee 4
To any thing but chivalry;
Nor put up blow, but that which laid
Right worshipful on shoulder-blade: 5
Chief of domestic knights, and errant,
Either for chartel 6 or for warrant:
Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
That could as well bind o’er, as swaddle: 7
Mighty he was at both of these,
And styl’d of War as well as Peace.

preachers used violent action, and made the pulpit an instrument of sedition, as the drum was of war. Dr. South, in one of his sermons, says, “The pulpit supplied the field with sword-men, and the parliament-house with incendiaries.”

1 Some have imagined from hence, that by Hudibras, was intended Sir Samuel Luke of Bedfordshire. Sir Samuel was an active justice of the peace, chairman of the quarter sessions, colonel of a regiment of foot in the parliament army, and a committee-man, of that county: but the poet’s satire is general, not personal.

2 Wight is originally a Saxon word, and signifies a person or being. It is often used by Chaucer, and the old poets. Sometimes it means a witch or conjuror.

3 A favourite title in romances.

4 Alluding to the Presbyterians, who refused to kneel at the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper; and insisted upon receiving it in a sitting or standing posture. See Baxter’s Life, &c. &c. In some of the kirk’s in Scotland, the pews are so made, that it is very difficult for any one to kneel.

5 That is, did not suffer a blow to pass unrevenged, except the one by which the King knighted him.

6 For a challenge. He was a military as well as a civil officer — ἀμφότερον βασιλεὺς τ’ ἀγαθός κρατιέρος τ’ αἰχμητής. II. iii. 179.

Pope translates it.

Great in the war, and great in arts of sway. II. iii. 236.

Plutarch tells us, that Alexander the Great was wonderfully delighted with this line.

7 Swaddle. — That is to heat or cudgel, says Johnson; but the word in the Saxon, signifies to bind up, to try to heal by proper bandages and applications; hence the verb to swathe, and the adjective swaddling clothes; the line therefore may signify, that his worship could either make peace, and heal disputes among his neighbours, or, if they could not agree, bind them over to the sessions for trial.
So some rats of amphibious nature,
Are either for the land or water.
But here our authors make a doubt,
Whether he were more wise, or stout.
Some hold the one, and some the other;
But howso' er they make a pother,
The difference was so small, his brain
Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain;
Which made some take him for a tool
That knaves do work with, call'd a Fool;
And offer'd to lay wagers, that
As Montaigne, playing with his cat,
Complains she thought him but an ass,
Much more she would Sir Hudibras:
For that's the name our valiant knight
To all his challenges did write.
But they're mistaken very much,
'Tis plain enough he was no such;
We grant, although he had much wit,
H' was very shy of using it;
As being loth to wear it out,
And therefore bore it not about,

---

1 A burlesque on the usual strain of rhetorical flattery, when authors pretend to be puzzled which of their patrons' noble qualities they should give the preference to. Something similar to this passage is the saying of Julius Capitolinus, concerning the emperor Verus; "melior orator quam poeta, aut ut verius dicam pejor poeta quam orator."

2 "When my cat and I," says Montaigne, "entertain each other with mutual apish tricks, as playing with a garter, who knows but I make her more sport than she makes me? shall I conclude her simple, who has her time to begin or refuse sportiveness as freely as I myself. Nay, who knows but she laughs at, and censures, my folly, for making her sport, and pities me for understanding her no better?" And of animals—"ils nous peuvent estimer bêtes, comme nous les estimons."

3 The poet, in depicting our knight, blends together his great pretensions, and his real abilities; giving him high encomiums on his affected character, and dashing them again with his true and natural imperfections. He was a pretended saint, but in fact a very great hypocrite; a great champion, though an errant coward; famed for learning, yet a shallow pedant.
Unless on holy-days, or so,
As men their best apparel do.
Beside, 'tis known he could speak Greek
As naturally as pigs squeek:
That Latin was no more difficile,
Than to a black-bird 'tis to whistle:
Being rich in both, he never scantened
His bounty unto such as wanted;
But much of either wou'd afford
To many, that had not one word.
For Hebrew roots, although they're found
To flourish most in barren ground,¹
He had such plenty, as suffic'd
To make some think him circumcis'd;
And truly so, perhaps, he was,
'Tis many a pious Christian's case.²

He was in Logic a great critic,³
Profoundly skill'd in Analytic;
He could distinguish, and divide
A hair 'twixt south, and south-west side;
On either side he would dispute,
Confute, change hands, and still confute;⁴
He'd undertake to prove, by force
Of argument, a man's no horse;
He'd prove a buzzard is no fowl,
And that a Lord may be an owl;

¹ Some students in Hebrew have been very angry with these lines, and assert, that they have done more to prevent the study of that language, than all the professors have done to promote it. See a letter to the printer of the Diary, dated January 15, 1789, and signed John Ryland. The word for, here means, as to.
² In the first editions this couplet was differently expressed. And truly so he was perhaps,
   Not as a proselyte, but for claps.
   Many vulgar, and some indecent phrases, were after corrected by Mr. Butler. And, indeed, as Mr. Cowley observes, in his Ode on Wit, —'tis just
   The author blush, there, where the reader must.
³ In some following lines the abuses of human learning are finely satirized.
⁴ Carneades, the academic, having one day disputed at Rome very
A calf an Alderman, a goose a Justice,\(^1\)
And rooks Committee-Men or Trustees.\(^2\)
He'd run in debt by disputation,
And pay with ratiocination.
All this by syllogism true,
In mood and figure, he would do.

For Rhetoric, he could not ope
His mouth, but out there flew a trope:
And when he happen'd to break off
I' th' middle of his speech, or cough,
H' had hard words, ready to shew why,
And tell what rules he did it by.\(^3\)
Else, when with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk.

copiously in praise of justice, refuted every word on the morrow, by a train of contrary arguments.—Something similar is said of Cardinal Perron.

\(^1\) A doggrel Alexandrine placed in the first line of the couplet, as it is sometimes in heroic Alexandrines: thus Dryden,
So all the use we make of heaven's discover'd will.

See his Religio Laici.

\(^2\) A rook is a well-known black bird, said by the glossarists to be cornix frugivora, and supposed by them to devour the grain; hence, by a figure, applied to sharpers and cheats. Thus the committee-men harassed and oppressed the country, devouring, in an arbitrary manner, the property of those they did not like, and this under the authority of parliament. Trustees are often mentioned by our poet. See p. 3. c. l. 1516.

In Scobel's collection is an ordinance, 1649, for the sale of the royal lands in order to pay the army; the common soldiers purchasing by regiments, like corporations, and having trustees for the whole. These trustees either purchased the soldiers' shares at a very small price, or sometimes cheated the officers and soldiers, by detaining these trust estates for their own use. The same happened often with regard to the church lands: but 13 Ch. II. an act passed for restoring all advowsons, glebe-lands and tythes, &c. to his Majesty's loyal subjects.

\(^3\) Aposiopesis — Quos ego — sed motos, &c.

Or cough — The preachers of those days looked upon coughing and hemming as ornaments of speech; and when they printed their sermons, noted in the margin where the preacher coughed or hemm'd. This practice was not confined to England, for Olivier Maillard, a Cordelier, and famous preacher, printed a sermon at Brussels in the year 1500, and marked in the margin where the preacher hemm'd once or twice, or coughed. See the French Notes.
For all a Rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools.
His ordinary rate of speech
In loftiness of sound was rich;
A Babylonish dialect,
Which learned pedants much affect;
It was a parti-colour'd dress
Of patch'd and piebald languages:
'Twas English cut on Greek and Latin,
Like fustian heretofore on satin.¹
It had an odd promiscuous tone
As if h' had talk'd three parts in one;
Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel;²
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once.³
This he as volubly would vent
As if his stock would ne'er be spent:
And truly, to support that charge,
He had supplies as vast and large.
For he could coin, or counterfeit
New words, with little or no wit;⁴

¹ The slashed sleeves and hose may be seen in the pictures of Dobson, Vandyke, and others: but one would conjecture from the word, heretofore, that they were not in common wear in our poet's time.
² In Dr. Donne's Satires, by Pope, we read,
You prove yourself so able,
Pity! you were not Druggerman at Babel;
For had they found a linguist half so good
I make no question but the tower had stood.
³ "Our borderers, to this day, speak a leash of languages (British, "Saxon, and Danish) in one: and it is hard to determine which of those "three nations has the greatest share in the motley breed." Camden's Britania—Cumberland, p. 1010. Butler, in his character of a lawyer, p. 167.—says, "he over-runs Latin and French with greater barbarism "than the Goths did Italy and France; and makes as mad a confusion "of language, by mixing both with English." Statius, rather ridicu- "losely, introduces Janus haranguing and complimenting Domitian with both his mouths, levat, ecce, supinas
Hinc atque inde manus, geminâque hac voce profatur.
⁴ The presbyterians coined and composed many new words, such as TYCHO BRAHE.

From a scenic sheet.
Words so debas’d and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on;¹
And when with hasty noise he spoke ’em,
The ignorant for current took ’em.
That had the orator, who once
Did fill his mouth with pebble stones
When he harangu’d, but known his phrase,
He would have us’d no other ways.²

In Mathematics he was greater Than Tycho Brahe, or Erra Pater:³
For he, by geometric scale,
Could take the size of pots of ale;
Resolve, by sines and tangents straight,
If bread or butter wanted weight;⁴
And wisely tell what hour o’ th’ day
The clock does strike, by Algebra.

Beside, he was a shrewd Philosopher,
And had read ev’ry text and gloss over:
Whate’er the crabbed’st author hath,⁵
He understood b’ implicit faith:
Whatever Sceptic could enquire for;
For every why he had a WHEREFORE:⁶

out-goings, carryings-on, nothingness, workings-out, gospel-walking times, secret ones, &c. &c.

¹ This seems to be the right reading; and alludes to the touchstone. Though Bishop Warburton conjectures, that tone ought to be read here instead of stone.

² These four lines are not found in the two first editions. They allude to the well known story of Demosthenes.

³ Erra Pater is the nick-name of some ignorant astrologer. A little paltry book of the rules of Erra Pater is still vended among the vulgar. I do not think that by Erra Pater, the poet meant William Lilly, but some contemptible person, to oppose to the great Tycho Brahe. Anti-climax was Butler’s favourite figure, and one great machine of his drollery.

⁴ He could by trigonometry, discover the exact dimensions of a loaf of bread, or roll of butter. The poet likewise intimates that his hero was an over-officious magistrate, searching out little offences, and levy-ing fines and forfeitures upon them. See Talgol’s speech in the next canto.

⁵ If any copy would warrant it, I should read “author saith.”

⁶ That is, he could elude one difficulty by proposing another, or answering one question by proposing another.
Knew more than forty of them do,
As far as words and terms could go.
All which he understood by rote,
And, as occasion serv'd, would quote;
No matter whether right or wrong,
They might be either said or sung.
His notions fitted things so well,
That which was which he could not tell;¹
But oftentimes mistook the one
For th'other, as great clerks have done.
He could reduce all things to acts,
And knew their natures by abstracts;²
Where entity and quiddity,
The ghost of defunct bodies fly;³
Where Truth in person does appear,⁴
Like words congeal'd in northern air.
He knew what's what, and that's as high
As metaphysic wit can fly.⁵

¹ He had a jumble of many confused notions in his head, which he could not apply to any useful purpose: or perhaps the poet alludes to those philosophers who took their ideas of substances to be the combinations of nature, and not the arbitrary workmanship of the human mind.

² A thing is in potentia, when it is possible, but does not actually exist; a thing is in act, when it is not only possible, but does exist. A thing is said to be reduced from power into act, when that which was only possible, begins really to exist: how far we can know the nature of things by abstracts, has long been a dispute. See Locke's Essay on the human understanding; and consult the old metaphysicians, if you think it worth while.

³ A fine satire upon the abstracted notions of the metaphysicians, calling the metaphysical natures the ghost or shadows of real substances.

⁴ Some authors have mistaken truth for a real thing or person, whereas it is nothing but a right method of putting those notions or images of things (in the understanding of man) into the same state and order that their originals hold in nature. Thus Aristotle, Met. lib. 2. "Unum-quoque sicut se habet secundum esse, ita se habet secundum veritatem."

⁵ See Rabelais's Pantagruel, livre 4. ch. 56. which hint is improved and drawn into a paper in the Tatler, No. 254. In Rabelais, Pantagruel throws upon deck three or four handfuls of frozen words, "il en jecta sus le tillac trois ou quatre poignées : et yeilds des parolles bien piquantes."

⁶ The jest here is, giving, by a low and vulgar expression, an apt description of the science. In the old systems of logic, quid est quid was a common question.
In school-divinity as able
As he that hight irrefragable;
A second Thomas, or at once,
To name them all, another Duns: ¹
Profound in all the nominal,
And real ways, beyond them all;
And, with as delicate a hand,
Could twist as tough a rope of sand;²
And weave fine cobwebs, fit for scull
That’s empty when the moon is full;³
Such as take lodgings in a head
That’s to be let unfurnished.
He could raise scruples dark and nice,
And after solve ’em in a trice;
As if Divinity had catch’d
The itch, on purpose to be scratch’d;
Or, like a mountebank, did wound
And stab herself with doubts profound,
Only to shew with how small pain
The sores of Faith are cur’d again;
Altho’ by woful proof we find,
They always leave a scar behind.

¹ A second Thomas; or at once
To name them all, another Duns.

These two lines originally in this place, were afterwards omitted by the author in his corrected copy.

Perhaps, upon recollection, he thought this great man, Aquinas, deserving of better treatment, or perhaps he was ashamed of the pun. However, as the passage now stands, it is an inimitable satire upon the old school divines, who were many of them honoured with some extravagant epithet, and as well known by it as by their proper names: thus Alexander Hales, was called doctor irrefragable, or invincible; Thomas Aquinas, the angelic doctor, or eagle of divines; Dun Scotus, the subtle doctor. This last was father of the Reals, and William Ocham of the Nominals. They were both of Merton College in Oxford, where they gave rise to an odd custom. See Plott’s Oxfordshire, page 285. —Hight, a Saxon and old English participle passive, signifying called.

² A proverbial saying, when men lose their labour by busying themselves in trifles, or attempting things impossible.

³ That is, subtle questions or foolish conceits, fit for the brain of a madman or lunatic.
He knew the seat of Paradise,
Could tell in what degree it lies; 1

1 "Paradisum locum diu multumque quasitum per terrarum orbem; "neque tantum per terrarum orbem, sed etiam in æcre, in lunâ, et ad "tertium usque celum." Burnet. Tell. Theor. 1. 2. Cap. 7. "Well "may I wonder at the notions of some learned men concerning the "garden of Eden; some affirming it to be above the moon, others "above the air; some that it is in the whole world, others only a part of "the north; some thinking that it was no where, whilst others supposed "it to be, God knows where, in the West Indies; and, for ought I "know, Sir John Mandeville's story of it may be as good as any of "them." Foulis's History of Plots, fol. p. 171. "Otrebius, in a tract "de Vitâ, Morte, et Resurrectione, would persuade us, that doubtless "the Rosicrucians, are in paradise, which place he seatheth near unto "the region of the moon." Olaus Rudbeckius, a Swede, in a very scarce book, entitled Atlantica sive Manheim, 4 vol. fol. out of zeal for the honour of his country, has endeavoured to prove that Sweden was the real paradise. The learned Huet, bishop of Avranches, wrote an express treatise De Situ Paradisi Terrestris, but not published till after our poet's death (1691). He gives a map of Paradise, and says, it is situated upon the canal formed by the Tigris and Euphrates, after they have joined near Apamea, between the place where they join, and that where they separate, in order to fall into the Persian gulf, on the eastern side of the south branch of the great circuit which this river makes towards the west, marked in the maps of Ptolemy, near Aracca, about 32 degrees 39 minutes north latitude, and 80 degrees 10 minutes cast longitude. Thus wild and various have been the conjectures concerning the seat of Paradise; but we must leave this point undetermined, till we are better acquainted with the antediluvian world, and know what alterations the flood made upon the face of the earth.

Mahomet is said to have assured his followers, that paradise was seated in heaven, and that Adam was cast out from thence when he transgressed: on the contrary, a learned prelate of our own time, supposes that our first parents were placed in paradise as a reward: for he says,

"God (as we must needs conclude) having tried Adam in the state "of nature, and approved of the good use he had made of his free-will "under the direction of that light, advanced him to a superior station "in paradise. How long before this remove, man had continued subject to natural religion alone, we can only guess. But of this we may "be assured, that it was some considerable time before the garden of "Eden could naturally be made fit for his reception."—See Warburton's "Works: Divine Legation, Vol. iii. p. 634. And again: "This natural "state of man, antecedent to the paradisaical, can never be too carefully "kept in mind, nor too precisely explained; since it is the very key or "clue (as we shall find in the progress of this work) which is to open "to us, to lead us through all the recesses and intimacies of the last "and completed dispensation of God to man; a dispensation long "become intricate and perplexed, by men's neglecting to distinguish "these two states or conditions; which, as we say, if not constantly "kept in mind, the Gospel can neither be well understood, nor reasonably supported."—Div. Leg. Vol. iii. p. 626. 4to.
And, as he was dispos'd, could prove it,
Below the moon, or else above it:
What Adam dreamt of when his bride
Came from her closet in his side:
Whether the devil tempted her
By an High-Dutch interpreter:1
If either of them had a navel;2
Who first made music malleable:3
Whether the serpent, at the fall,
Had cloven feet, or none at all.4
All this without a gloss, or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment,
In proper terms, such as men smatter,
When they throw out, and miss the matter.
For his Religion, it was fit
To match his learning and his wit:
'Twas Presbyterian, true blue,5
For he was of that stubborn crew

1 Johannes Goropius Becanus, a man very learned, and physician to Mary queen of Hungary, sister to the Emperor Charles V. maintained the Teutonic to be the first, and most ancient language in the world. Verstegan thinks the Teutonic not older than the tower of Babel. Decayed Intelligence, ch. 7.

2 "Over one of the doors of the King's antichamber at St. James's, is a picture of Adam and Eve, which formerly hung in the gallery at Whitehall, thence called the Adam and Eve Gallery. Evelyn, in the preface to his Idea of the Perfection of Painting, mentions this picture, painted by Malvagius, as he calls him (John Mabuse, of a little town of the same name in Hainault), and objects to the absurdity of representing Adam and Eve with navels, and a fountain of carved imagery in Paradise. The latter remark is just; the former is only worthy of a critical man-midwife." Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting. Henry VII. vol. i. p. 50. Dr. Brown has the fifth chapter of the fifth book of his Vulgar Errors, expressly on this subject, "Of the Picture of Adam and Eve with Navels."

3 This relates to the idea that music was first invented by Pythagoras, on hearing a blacksmith strike his anvil with a hammer—a story which has been frequently ridiculed.

4 That curse upon the serpent, "on thy belly shalt thou go," seems to imply a deprivation of what he enjoyed before; it has been thought that the serpent had feet at first. So Basil says, he went erect like a man, and had the use of speech before the fall.

5 Alluding to the proverb—"true blue will never stain:" representing the stubbornness of the party, which made them deaf to reason, and incapable of conviction,
Of errant saints, whom all men grant
To be the true church militant:
Such as do build their faith upon
The holy text of pike and gun;
Decide all controversy by Infallible artillery;
And prove their doctrine orthodox
By apostolic blows, and knocks;
Call fire, and sword, and desolation,
A godly-thorough-Reformation,
Which always must be carry'd on,
And still be doing, never done:
As if Religion were intended
For nothing else but to be mended.
A sect, whose chief devotion lies
In odd perverse antipathies:
In falling out with that or this,
And finding somewhat still amiss.

1 The poet uses the word errant with a double meaning; without doubt in allusion to knights errant in romances: and likewise to the had sense in which the word is used, as, an errant knave, an errant villain.

2 The Church on earth is called militant, as struggling with temptations, and subject to persecutions: but the Presbyterians of those days were literally the church militant, fighting with the establishment, and all that opposed them.

3 Cornet Joyce, when he carried away the king from Holdenby, being desired by his majesty to shew his instructions, drew up his troop in the inward court, and said, "These, sir, are my instructions."

4 How far the character here given of the Presbyterians is a true one, I leave others to guess. When they have not had the upper hand, they certainly have been friends to mildness and moderation: but Dr. Grey produces passages from some of their violent and absurd writers, which made him think that they had a strong spirit of persecution at the bottom.

Some of our brave ancestors said of the Romans, "Ubi solitudinem faciunt, pacem appellant." Tacitus, Vita Agricol. 30.

5 In all great quarrels, the parties are apt to take pleasure in contradicting each other, even in the most triviling matters. The Presbyterians reckoned it sinful to eat plum-porridge, or minced pies, at Christmas. The cavaliers observing the formal carriage of their adversaries, fell into the opposite extreme, and ate and drank plentifully every day, especially after the restoration.

6 Queen Elizabeth was often heard to say, that she knew very well what would content the Catholics, but that she never could learn what would content the Puritans.
More peevish, cross, and splenetic,
Than dog distract, or monkey sick.
That with more care keep holy-day
The wrong, than others the right way:¹
Compound for sins they are inclin'd to,
By damning those they have no mind to:
Still so perverse and opposite,
As if they worshipp'd God for spite.
The self-same thing they will abhor
One way, and long another for.
Free-will they one way disavow,
Another, nothing else allow.²
All piety consists therein
In them, in other men all sin.³
Rather than fail, they will defy
That which they love most tenderly;
Quarrel with minc'd pies,⁴ and disparage
Their best and dearest friend — plum-porridge;
Fat pig and goose itself oppose,
And blaspheme custard through the nose.
Th' apostles of this fierce religion,
Like Mahomet's, were ass and widgeon.⁵

¹ In the year 1645, Christmas-day was ordered to be observed as a fast; and Oliver, when protector, was feasted by the lord mayor on Ash-Wednesday. When James the first desired the magistrates of Edinburgh to feast the French ambassadors before their return to France, the ministers proclaimed a fast to be kept the same day.
² As maintaining absolute predestination, and denying the liberty of man's will: at the same time contending for absolute freedom in rites and ceremonies, and the discipline of the church.
³ They themselves being the elect, and so incapable of sinning, and all others being reprobates, and therefore not capable of performing any good action.
⁴ "A sort of inquisition was set up, against the food which had been customarily in use at this season." Blackall's Sermon on Christmas-day.
⁵ Mahomet tells us, in the Koran, that the Angel Gabriel brought to him a milk-white beast, called Alborach, something like an ass, but bigger, to carry him to the presence of God. Alborach refused to let him get up, unless he would promise to procure him an entrance into paradise: which Mahomet promising, he got up. Mahomet is also said to have had a tame pigeon, which he taught secretly to eat out of his
To whom our knight, by fast instinct
Of wit and temper, was so linkt,
As if hypocrisy and nonsense
Had got th' advowson of his conscience.

Thus was he gifted and accouter'd,
We mean on th' inside, not the outward:
That next of all we shall discuss;
Then listen, Sirs, it followeth thus:

His tawny beard was th' equal grace
Both of his wisdom and his face;
In cut and dye so like a tile,
A sudden view it would beguile:
The upper part thereof was whey,
The nether orange, mixt with grey.
This hairy meteor did denounce
The fall of sceptres and of crowns;¹

¹ Alluding to the vulgar opinion, that comets are always predictive of some public calamity.

Car, to make his followers believe, that by means of this bird there were imparted to him some divine communications. Our poet calls it a widgeon, for the sake of equivocation; widgeon in the figurative sense, signifying a foolish silly fellow. It is usual to say of such a person, that he is as wise as a widgeon: and a drinking song has these lines.

Mahomet was no divine, but a senseless widgeon,
To forbid the use of wine to those of his religion.

Widgeon and weaver, says Mr. Ray, in his Philosophical Letters, are male and female sex.

"There are still a multitude of doves about Mecca preserved and fed "there with great care and superstition, being thought to be of the "breed of that dove which spake in the car of Mahomet." Sandys' Travels.

Pliny calls a comet crinita.

Mr. Butler in his Genuine Remains, vol. i. p. 54, says,
Which way the dreadful comet went
In sixty-four, and what it meant?
What Nations yet are to bewail
The operations of its tail:
Or whether France or Holland yet,
Or Germany, be in its debt?
What wars and plagues in Christendom
Have happen'd since, and what to come?
What kings are dead, how many queens
And princesses are poison'd since?
With grisly type did represent
Declining age of government,
And tell, with hieroglyphic spade,
Its own grave and the state's were made.
Like Sampson's heart-breakers, it grew
In time to make a nation rue;¹
Tho' it contributed its own fall,
To wait upon the public downfall:²
It was canonic,³ and did grow
In holy orders by strict vow:⁴
Of rule as sullen and severe
As that of rigid Cordeliere:⁵

And who shall next of all by turn,
Make courts wear black, and tradesmen mourn?
And when again shall lay embargo
Upon the admiral, the good ship Argo.

Homer, as translated by Pope, Iliad iv. 434. says,
While dreadful comets glaring from afar,
Forewarn'd the horrors of the Theban war.

¹ Heart-breakers were particular curls worn by the ladies, and sometimes by men. Sampson's strength consisted in his hair; when that was cut off, he was taken prisoner; when it grew again, he was able to pull down the house, and destroy his enemies. See Judges. cap. xvi.

² Many of the Presbyterians and Independents swore not to cut their beards, not, like Mephibosheth, till the king was restored, but till monarchy and episcopacy were ruined. Such vows were common among the barbarous nations, especially the Germans. Civilis, as we learn from Tacitus, having destroyed the Roman legions, cut his hair, which he had vowed to let grow from his first taking up arms. And it became at length a national custom among some of the Germans, never to trim their hair, or their beards, till they had killed an enemy.

³ The latter editions, for canonie, read monastic.

⁴ This line would make one think, that in the preceding one we ought to read monastic; though the vow of not shaving the beard 'till some particular event happened, was not uncommon in those times. In a humorous poem, falsely ascribed to Mr. Butler, entitled, The Cobbler and Vicar of Bray, we read,

This worthy knight was one that swore
He would not cut his beard,
'Till this ungodly nation was
From kings and bishops clear'd.

Which holy vow he firmly kept,
And most devoutly wore
A grisly meteor on his face,
'Till they were both no more.

⁵ An order so called in France, from the knotted cord which they Tw'was bound to suffer persecution
And martyrdom with resolution;
T' oppose itself against the hate
And vengeance of th' incensed state:
In whose defiance it was worn,
Still ready to be pull'd and torn,
With red-hot irons to be tortur'd,
Revil'd, and spit upon, and martyr'd:
Maugre all which, 'twas to stand fast,
As long as monarchy should last;
But when the state should hap to reel,
'Twas to submit to fatal steel,
And fall, as it was consecrate,
A sacrifice to fall of state;
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiskers,
And twine so close, that Time should never,
In life or death, their fortunes sever;
But with his rusty sickle mow
Both down together at a blow.
So learned Taliacotius, from
The brawny part of porter's bum,
Cut supplemental noses, which Would last as long as parent breech:

wore about their middles. In England they were named Grey Friars, and were the strictest branch of the Franciscans.

1 Taliacotius was professor of physic and surgery at Bologna, where he was born, 1553. His treatise is well known. He says, the operation has been practised by others before him with success. See a very humorous account of him, Tatler, No. 260. The design of Taliacotius has been improved into a method of holding correspondence at a great distance, by the sympathy of flesh transferred from one body to another. If two persons exchange a piece of flesh from the bicepital muscle of the arm, and circumscribe it with an alphabet; when the one pricks himself in A, the other is to have a sensation thereof in the same part, and by inspecting his arm, perceive what letter the other person points to.

Our author likewise intended to ridicule Sir Kenelm Digby, who, in his Treatise on the sympathetic powder, mentions, but with caution, this method of engrafting noses. It has been observed, that the ingenuity of the ancients seems to have failed them on a similiar occasion,
But when the date of Nock was out,\(^1\) Off dropt the sympathetic snout.

His back, or rather burthen, show'd As if it stoop'd with its own load.
For as Æneas bore his sire
Upon his shoulders thro' the fire,
Our knight did bear no less a pack Of his own buttocks on his back:
Which now had almost got the upper-

Hand of his head, for want of crupper.
To poise this equally, he bore

A paunch of the same bulk before:
Which still he had a special care
To keep well-cramm'd with thrifty fare;
As white-pot, butter-milk, and curds,
Such as a country-house affords;
With other victual, which anon

We farther shall dilate upon,
When of his hose we come to treat,
The cup-board where he kept his meat.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof, since they were obliged to piece out the mutilated shoulder of Pelops with ivory.

In latter days it has been a common practice with dentists, to draw the teeth of young chimney-sweepers, and fix them in the heads of other persons. There was a lady, whose mouth was supplied in this manner. After some time the boy claimed the tooth, and went to a justice of peace for a warrant against the lady, who, he alleged, had stolen it. The case would have puzzled Sir Hudibras.

Dr. Hunter mentions some ill effects of this practice. A person who gains a tooth, may soon after want a nose. The simile has been translated into Latin thus.

\[
\text{Sic adscititios nasos de clune torosi}
\text{Vectoris doctâ scuict Taliacotius arte :}
\text{Qui potuere parem durando æquare parentem :}
\text{At postquam fato clunis computruit, ipsum}
\text{Una symphaticum cœpit tabescere rostrum.}
\]

\(^1\) Nock is a British word, signifying a slit or crack. And hence, figuratively, nates, la fesse, the fundament. Nock, Nockys, is used by Gawin Douglas in his version of the Æneid, for the bottom, or extremity of any thing; Glossarists say, the word hath that sense both in Italian and Dutch: others think it a British word.
Whereby 'twas fitter for his use,
Who fear'd no blows but such as bruise.¹

His breeches were of rugged woollen,
And had been at the siege of Bullen;²
To old King Harry so well known,
Some writers held they were his own.
Thro' they were lin'd with many a piece
Of ammunition-bread and cheese,
And fat black-puddings, proper food
For warriors that delight in blood:
For, as we said, he always chose
To carry vittle in his hose,
That often tempted rats and mice,
The ammunition to surprise:
And when he put a hand but in
The one or th' other magazine,
They stoutly in defence on't stood,
And from the wounded foe drew blood;
And till th' were storm'd and beaten out,
Ne'er left the fortif'd redoubt;
And tho' knights errant, as some think,
Of old did neither eat nor drink,³
Because when thorough desarts vast,
And regions desolate, they past,

¹ A man of nice honour suffers more from a kick, or slap in the face, than from a wound. Sir Walter Raleigh says, to be stricken with a sword is like a man, but to be stricken with a stick is like a slave.
² H enry VIII. besieged Boulogne in person, July 14, 1544. He was very fat, and consequently his breeches very large. See the paintings at Cowdry in Sussex, and the engravings published by the Society of Antiquaries. Their breeches and hose were the same, Port-hose, Trunk-hose, Pantaloons, where all like our sailors' trowsers. See Pedules in Cowel, and the 74th canon ad finem.
³ "Though I think, says Don Quixote, that I have read as many "histories of chivalry in my time as any other man, I never could find "that knights errant ever eat, unless it were by mere accident, when "they were invited to great feasts and royal banquets; at other times, "they indulged themselves with little other food besides their "thoughts."
CANTO I.

HUDIBRAS.

Where belly-timber above ground,
Or under, was not to be found,
Unless they graz’d, there’s not one word
Of their provision on record:
Which made some confidently write,
They had no stomachs but to fight.
’Tis false: for Arthur wore in hall
Round table like a farthingal, On which, with shirt pull’d out behind,
And eke before, his good knights din’d.
Tho’ ’twas no table some suppose,
But a huge pair of round trunk hose:
In which he carry’d as much meat,
As he and all his knights could eat,
When laying by their swords and truncheons,
They took their breakfasts, or their nuncheons.

But let that pass at present, lest
We should forget where we digrest;
As learned authors use, to whom
We leave it, and to th’ purpose come.

His puissant sword unto his side,
Near his undaunted heart, was ty’d,

1 Arthur is said to have lived about the year 530, and to have been born in 501, but so many romantic exploits are attributed to him, that some have doubted whether there was any truth at all in his history.

Geoffrey of Monmouth calls him the son of Uther Pendragon, others think he was himself called Uther Pendragon: Uther signifying in the British tongue a club, because as with a club he beat down the Saxons: Pendragon, because he wore a dragon on the crest of his helmet.

2 The farthingal was a sort of hoop worn by the ladies. King Arthur is said to have made choice of the round table that his knights might not quarrel about precedence.

3 True-wit, in Ben Jonson’s Silent Woman, says of Sir Amorous La Fool, “If he could but victual himself for half-a-year in his breeches, “ he is sufficiently armed to over-run a country.” Act. 4. sc. 5.

4 Nuncheons—Meals now made by the servants of most families about noon-tide, or twelve o’clock. Our ancestors in the 13th and 14th century had four meals a day,—breakfast at 7; dinner at 10; supper at 4; and livery at 8 or 9; soon after which they went to-bed. See the Earl of Northumberland’s household-book.

The tradesmen and labouring people had only 3 meals a day,—breakfast at 8; dinner at 12; and supper at 6. They had no livery.
With basket-hilt, that would hold broth,
And serve for fight and dinner both.
In it he melted lead for bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter t' any such.
The trenchant blade, Toledo trusty,¹
For want of fighting was grown rusty,
And ate into itself, for lack
Of some body to hew and hack.
The peaceful scabbard where it dwelt,
The rancour of its edge had felt:
For of the lower end two handful
It had devour'd, 'twas so manful,
And so much scorn'd to lurk in case,
As if it durst not show its face.
In many desperate attempts,
Of warrants, exigents,² contempts,
It had appear'd with courage bolder
Than Serjeant Bum invading shoulder:³
Oft had it ta'en possession,
And pris'ners too, or made them run.

This sword a dagger had, his page,
That was but little for his age:⁴

¹ Toledo is a city in Spain, the capital of New Castile, famous for the manufacture of swords: the Toledo blades were generally broad, to wear on horseback, and of great length, suitable to the old Spanish dress. See Dillon’s Voyage through Spain, 4to 1782. But those which I have seen were narrow, like a stiletto, but much longer: though probably our hero’s was broad, as is implied by the epithet trenchant, cutting.
² Exigent is a writ issued in order to bring a person to an outlawry, if he does not appear to answer the suit commenced against him.
³ Alluding to the method by which bum-bailiffs, as they are called, arrest persons, giving them a tap on the shoulder.
⁴ Thus Homer accoutres Agamemnon with a dagger hanging near his sword, which he used instead of a knife. Iliad. Lib. iii. 271. A gentleman producing some wine to his guests in small glasses, and saying it was sixteen years old; a person replied, it was very small for its age—ἐπιδόντος ἐκ τῶν οίων ἐν ψεκτηρᾷ μικροῦ καὶ ἐπιόντος ὁτι ἱκκαίε·καίτης, μικρός γε, ἠφι, ὡς τοστετον ἐτῶν. Athenæus Ed. Casaubon. p. 584. and 585. lib. xiii. 289.
And therefore waited on him so,
As dwarfs upon knights errant do.
It was a serviceable dudgeon,
Either for fighting or for drudging:
When it had stabb’d, or broke a head,
It would scrape trenchers, or chip bread,
Toast cheese or bacon,
To bait a mouse-trap, ’twould not care:
’Twould make clean shoes, and in the earth
Set leeks and onions, and so forth:
It had been ’prentice to a brewer,
Where this, and more, it did endure;
But left the trade, as many more
Have lately done, on the same score.
In th’ holsters, at the saddle-bow,
Two aged pistols he did stow,
Among the surplus of such meat
As in his hose he could not get.

---

1 A dudgeon was a short sword, or dagger: from the Teutonic Degen, a sword.
2 That is for doing any drudgery-work, such as follows in the next verses.
3 Corporal Nim says, in Shakspeare’s Henry V. “I dare not fight, “but I will wink, and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one, but what “though—it will toast cheese.”
4 This was a common joke upon Oliver Cromwell, who was said to have been a partner in a brewery. It was frequently made the subject of lampoon during his life-time. In the collection of loyal songs, is one called the Protecting Brewer, which has these stanzas—

A brewer may be as bold as a hector,
When as he had drunk his cup of nectar,
And a brewer may be a Lord Protector,
Which nobody can deny.

Now here remains the strangest thing,
How this brewer about his liquor did bring
To be an emperor or a king,
Which nobody can deny.

But whether Oliver was really concerned in a brewery, at any period of his life, it is difficult to determine. Heath, one of his professed enemies, assures us, in his Flagellum, that there was no foundation for the report.
Colonel Pride had been a brewer: Colonel Hewson was first a shoemaker, then a brewer’s clerk: and Scott had been clerk to a brewer.

VOL. I.
These would inveigle rats with th' scent,
To forage when the cocks were bent;
And sometimes catch 'em with a snap,
As cleverly as th' ablest trap.¹

They were upon hard duty still,
And every night stood sentinel,
To guard the magazine i' th' hose,
From two legg'd, and from four-legg'd foes.

Thus clad and fortyfy'd, Sir Knight,
From peaceful home, set forth to fight.
But first, with nimble active force,
He got on th' outside of his horse :²
For having but one stirrup ty'd
T' his saddle, on the further side,
It was so short, h' had much ado
To reach it with his desp'rate toe.
But after many strains and heaves,
He got upon the saddle eaves,
From whence he vaulted into th' seat,
With so much vigour, strength, and heat,
That he had almost tumbled over
With his own weight, but did recover,
By laying hold on tail and mane,
Which oft he us'd instead of rein.

But now we talk of mounting steed,
Before we further do proceed,
It doth behove us to say something
Of that which bore our valiant bumkin.³

¹ This and the preceding couplet were in the first editions, but afterwards left out in the author's copy.
² Nothing can be more completely droll, than this description of Hudibras mounting his horse. He had one stirrup tied on the off-side very short, the saddle very large; the knight short, fat, and deformed, having his breeches and pockets stuffed with black puddings and other provision, over-acting his effort to mount, and nearly tumbling over on the opposite side; his single spur, we may suppose, catching in some of his horse's furniture.
³ A silly country fellow, or awkward stick of wood, from the Belg. boom, arbor, and ken, or kin, a diminutive.
The beast was sturdy, large, and tall,
With mouth of meal, and eyes of wall;
I would say eye, for h' had but one,
As most agree, though some say none.
He was well stay'd, and in his gait,
Preserv'd a grave, majestic state.
At spur or switch no more he skipt,
Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt:
And yet so fiery, he would bound,
As if he griev'd to touch the ground:
That Cæsar's horse, who, as fame goes,
Had corns upon his feet and toes:
Was not by half so tender-hoofed,
Nor trod upon the ground so soft:
And as that beast would kneel and stoop,
Some write, to take his rider up:

1 This alludes to the story of a Spaniard, who was condemned to run the gantlet, and disdained to avoid any part of the punishment by mending his pace.
2 Suetonius relates, that the hoofs of Cæsar's horse were divided like toes. And again, Lycosthenes, de prodigis et portentis, p. 214. has the following passage: "Julius Caesar cum Lusitanis praeset — equus in signis, fissis unguibus anteriorum pedum, et propemodum digitorum humanorum natus est; ferox admodum, atque elatus: quem natum apud se, cum aurispices imperium orbis terrae significare domino pro nuntiassent, magna cura atuit; nec patientem sessoris alterius, primus ascendit: cujus etiam signum pro Æde Veneris genereticis postea dedicit." — The statue of Julius Caesar's horse, which was placed before the temple of Venus Genetrix, had the hoofs of the fore feet parted like the toes of a man. Montfaucon's Antiq. Vol. ii. p. 58.
In Havercamp's Medals of Christina, on the reverse of a coin of Gordianus Pius, pl. 34. is represented an horse with two human feet, or rather one a foot, the other a hand — Arion is said, by the scholar, on Statius, Theb. vi. ver. 301. to have had the feet of a man — humano vestigio dextri pedis.
3 Stirrups were not in use in the time of Cæsar. Common persons, who were active and hardy, vaulted into their seats; and persons of distinction had their horses taught to bend down toward the ground, or else they were assisted by their strators or equerries. Q. Curtius mentions a remarkable instance of docility of the elephants in the army of king Porus: "Indus more solito elephantum procumbere jussit in genua; qui ut se submissit, ceteri quoque, ita enim instituunt erant, demiseris corpora in terram." I know no writer who relates that Cæsar's horse would kneel; and perhaps Mr. Butler's memory deceived him. Of Bucephalus, the favoured steed of Alexander, it is said — "ille
So Hudibras his, 'tis well known,
Would often do, to set him down.
We shall not need to say what lack
Of leather was upon his back:
For that was hidden under pad,
And breech of Knight gall'd full as bad.
His strutting ribs on both sides show'd
Like furrows he himself had plow'd:
For underneath the skirt of pannel,
'Twixt every two there was a channel.
His draggling tail hung in the dirt,
Which on his rider he would flirt;
Still as his tender side he prickt.
For Hudibras wore but one spur,
As wisely knowing, could he stir
To active trot one side of's horse,
The other would not hang an arse.
A Squire he had, whose name was Ralph,¹
That in th' adventure went his half.

¹ As the knight was of the Presbyterian party, so the squire was an Anabaptist or Independent. This gives our author an opportunity of characterizing both these sects, and of shewing their joint concurrence against the king and church.

The Presbyterians and Independents had each a separate form of church discipline. The Presbyterian system appointed, for every parish, a minister, one or more deacons, and two ruling elders, who were laymen chosen by the parishioners. Each parish was subject to a classis, or union of several parishes. A deputation of two ministers and four ruling elders, from every classis in the county, constituted a
Though writers, for more stately tone,
Do call him Ralph, 'tis all one:
And when we can, with metre safe,
We'll call him so, if not, plain Raph;¹
For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which, like ships, they steer their courses.
An equal stock of wit and valour
He had lain in, by birth a tailor.
The mighty Tyrian queen that gain'd,
With subtle shreds, a tract of land,²
Did leave it, with a castle fair,
To his great ancestor, her heir; provincial synod. And superior to the provincial was the national synod, consisting of deputies from the former, in the proportion of two ruling elders to one minister. Appeals were allowed throughout these several jurisdictions, and ultimately to the parliament. On the attachment of the Presbyterians to their lay-elders, Mr. Seldon observes, in his Table-talk, p. 118, that "there must be some laymen in the synod to "overlook the clergy, lest they spoil the civil work: just as when the "good woman puts a cat into the milk-house, she sends her maid to "look after the cat, lest the cat should eat up the cream."

The Independents maintained, that every congregation was a complete church within itself, and had no dependence on classical, provincial, or national synods or assemblies. They chose their own ministers, and required no ordination or laying on of hands, as the Presbyterians did. They admitted any gifted brother, that is, any enthusiast who thought he could preach or pray, into their assemblies. They entered into covenant with their minister, and he with them. Soon after the Revolution the Presbyterians and Independents coalesced, the former yielding in some respects to the latter.

¹ Paulino Ausonius, metrum sic suasit, ut esses
Tu prior, et nomen prægeredere meum.

Sir Roger L'Estrange supposes, that in his description of Ralph, our author had in view one Isaac Robinson, a butcher in Moorfields: others think that the character was designed for Pemble, a tailor, and one of the committee of sequestrators.—Dr. Grey supposes, that the name of Ralph was taken from the grocer's apprentice, in Beaumont and Fletcher's play, called the Knight of the Burning Pestle. Mr. Pemberton, who was a relation and godson of Mr. Butler, said, that the 'squire was designed for Ralph Bedford, esquire, member of parliament for the town of Bedford.

² The allusion is to the well known story of Dido, who purchased as much land as she could surround with an ox's hide. She cut the hide into small strips, and obtained twenty-two furlongs.

Mercatique solum, facti de nomine Byrsam,
Taurino quantum possent circumdare tergo.

Virg. Æneid. lib. i. 367.
From him descended cross-leg’d knights;¹
Fam’d for their faith and warlike fights
Against the bloody Cannibal,²
Whom they destroy’d both great and small.
This sturdy Squire had, as well
As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell,³
Not with a counterfeited pass
Of golden bough,⁴ but true gold lace.
His knowledge was not far behind
The knight’s, but of another kind,
And he another way came by’t;
Some call it gifts, and some new light.
A lib’ral art that costs no pains
Of study, industry, or brains.
His wits were sent him for a token,
But in the carriage crack’d and broken.⁵
Like commendation nine-pence crookt,
With — to and from my love — it lookt.⁶

¹ Tailors, who usually sit at their work in this posture; and knights of the Holy Voyage, persons who had made a vow to go to the Holy Land, after death were represented on their monuments with their legs across. "Sumptuosissima per orbem christianum ereta caenobia; in quibus hodie quoque videre licet militum illorum imagines, monumenta, tibiis in crucem transversis: sic enim sepulti fuerunt quotquot illo seculo nomina bello sacro dedissent, vel qui tunc temporis crucem suscepissent." Chronic. Ecclesiast. lib. ii. p. 72.

² Tailors, as well as knights of the Holy Voyage, are famed for their faith, the former frequently trusting much in the way of their trade. The words, bloody cannibal, are not altogether applied to the Saracens; who, on many occasions behaved with great generosity; but they denote a more insignificant creature, to whom the tailor is said to be an avowed enemy.

³ In allusion to Aeneas’s descent into hell, and the tailor’s repairing to the place under the board on which he sat to work, called hell likewise, being a receptacle for all the stolen scraps of cloth, lace, &c.

⁴ Mr. Montague Bacon, says, it should seem, by these lines, that the poet thought Virgil meant a counterfeited bough; Dr. Plot, in his History of Staffordshire, says, that gold in the mines often grows in the shape of boughs and branches, and leaves; therefore Virgil, who understood nature well, though he gave it a poetical turn, means no more than a sign of Aeneas’s going under ground where mines are.

⁵ That is, that he was crack-brained.

⁶ From this passage, and from the proverb used (Post. works, v. ii. No. 114) viz. "he has brought his noble to a nincepence," one would be led to conclude, that some coins had actually been strucken of this
He ne'er consider'd it, as loth
To look a gift-horse in the mouth;
And very wisely would lay forth
No more upon it than 'twas worth.
But as he got it freely, so
He spent it frank and freely too.
For saints themselves will sometimes be,
Of gifts that cost them nothing, free.
By means of this, with hem and cough, Prolongers to enlighten'd snuff.

denomination and value. And, indeed, two instances of this are recorded by Mr. Folkes, both during the civil wars, the one at Dublin, and the other at Newark. Table of English coins, ed. 1763, p. 92. plates 27. 4. and 28. But long before this period, by royal proclamation of July 9, 1551, the base testoons or shillings of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. were rated at ninepence (Folkes, ibid. p. 37.) and of these there were great numbers. It may be conjectured also, that the clipt shillings of Edward and Elizabeth; and, perhaps, some foreign silver coins, might pass by common allowance and tacit agreement for ninepence, and be so called. In William Prynne's answer to John Audland the Quaker, in Butler's Genuine Remains, vol. i. p. 382. we read, a light piece of gold is good and lawful English coin, current with allowance, though it be clipt, filed, washed, or worn: even so are my ears legal, warrantable, and sufficient ears, however they have been clipt, par'd, cropt, circumcis'd.

In Queen Elizabeth's time, as Holinshed, Stow, and Camden affirm, a proclamation was issued, declaring that the testoon coined for twelvepence, should be current for fourpence halfpenny; an inferior sort, marked with a greyhound, for two-pence farthing; and a third and worst sort not to be current at all: stamping and milling money took place about the year 1662.

All, or any of these pieces, might serve for pocket-pieces among the vulgar, and be given to their sweethearts and comrades, as tokens of remembrance and affection. At this day, an Elizabeth's shilling is not unfrequently applied to such purpose. The country people say commonly, I will use your commendations, that is, make your compliments. George Philips, before his execution, bended a six-pence, and presented it to a friend of his, Mr. Stroud. He gave a bended shilling to one Mr. Clark. See a brief narrative of the stupendous tragedy intended by the satanical saints, 1662, p. 59.

1 That is, he did not consider it was crackt and broken, or perhaps it may mean, he did not overvalue, and hoard it up, it being given him by inspiration, according to the doctrine of the Independents.
2 When the barber came to shave Sir Thomas More the morning of his execution, the prisoner told him, "that there was a contest betwixt the King and him for his head, and he would not willingly lay out more upon it than it was worth."
3 Prolongers to enlighten'd snuff. — This reading seems confirmed by Butler's Genuine Remains, vol. i. p. 55. and I prefer it to "enlightened
He could deep mysteries unriddle,
As easily as thread a needle;
For as of vagabonds we say,
That they are ne'er beside their way:
Whate'er men speak by this new light,
Still they are sure to be i' th' right.
'Tis a dark-lantern of the spirit,
Which none see by but those that bear it;
A light that falls down from on high,\(^1\)
For spiritual trades to cozen by:
An ignis fatuus, that bewitches,
And leads men into pools and ditches,\(^2\)
To make them dip themselves, and sound
For Christendom in dirty pond;
To dive, like wild-fowl, for salvation,
And fish to catch regeneration.
This light inspires, and plays upon
The nose of saint, like bagpipe drone,

"stuff." Enlightened snuff is a good allusion. As a lamp just expiring with a faint light for want of oil, emits flashes at intervals; so the tailor's shallow discourse, like the extempore preaching of his brethren, was lengthened out with hems and coughs, with stops and pauses, for want of matter. The preachers of those days considered hems, nasal tones, and coughs, as graces of oratory. Some of their discourses are printed with breaks and marginal notes, which shew where the preacher introduced his embellishments.

The expiring state of the lamp has furnished Mr. Addison with a beautiful simile in his Cato:

Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady flame
Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,
And falls again, as loath to quit its hold.

And Mr. Butler, Part iii. Cant. ii. l. 349, says, Prolong the snuff of life in pain,
And from the grave recover — gain.

See also Genuine Remains, vol. i. p. 374. "And this serves thee to "the same purpose that hcm's and hah's do thy gifted ghostly fathers," "that is, to lose time, and put off thy commodity."

Butler seems fond of this expression: "the snuff of the moon is full "as harsh as the snuff of a sermon."

\(^1\) A burlesque parallel between the spiritual gifts, and the sky-lights which tradesmen sometimes have in their shops to shew their goods to advantage.

\(^2\) An humorous parallel between the vapoury exhalation which misleads the traveller, and the re-baptizing practised by the Anabaptists.
And speaks through hollow empty soul,
As through a trunk, or whisp'ring hole,
Such language as no mortal ear
But spiritual eaves-droppers can hear.
So Phoebus, or some friendly muse,
Into small poets song infuse;
Which they at second-hand rehearse,
Thro' reed or bag-pipe, verse for verse.
Thus Ralph became infallible,
As three or four legg'd oracle,
The ancient cup, or modern chair;¹
Spoke truth point blank, though unaware.
For mystic learning wondrous able
In magic talisman, and cabal,²
Whose primitive tradition reaches,
As far as Adam's first green breeches:³

¹ "Is not this the cup, saith Joseph's steward, whereby indeed my lord divineth?" The Pope's dictates are said to be infallible, when he delivers them ex cathedra. The priestess of Apollo at Delphos used a three-legged stool when she gave out her oracles. From Joseph's cup, perhaps, came the idea of telling fortunes by coffee grounds.

² Talisman was a magical inscription or figure, engraven or cast, by the direction of astrologers, under certain positions of the heavenly bodies. The talisman of Apollonius, which stood in the hippodrome at Constantinople, was a brazen eagle. It was melted down when the Latins took that city. They were thought to have great efficacy as preservatives from diseases and all kinds of evil. The image of any vermin cast in the precise moment, under a particular position of the stars, was supposed to destroy the vermin represented. Some make Apollonius Tyaneus the inventor of talismans: but they were probably of still higher antiquity. Necepsus, a king of Egypt, wrote a treatise De ratione præscendi futura, &c. Thus Ausonius, Epist. 19. Pontio Paulino — "Quique magos docuit mysteria vana Necepsus." The Greeks called them τελιμαρα, but the name probably is Arabic — Gregory's account of them is learned and copious. Cabal, or cabbala, is a sort of divination by letters or numbers: it signifies likewise the secret or mystical doctrines of any religion or sect. The Jews pretend to have received their cabbala from Moses, or even from Adam. "Aiunt se conservasse a temporibus Mosis, vel etiam ipsius Adami, doctrinam quandam arcanam dictam cabalam." Burnet's Archeol. Philosoph.

³ The author of the Magia Adamica endeavours to prove, that the learning of the ancient Magi was derived from the knowledge which God
Deep-sighted in intelligences,
Ideas, atoms, influences;
And much of terra incognita,
Th' intelligible world could say;¹
A deep occult philosopher,
As learn'd as the wild Irish are,²
Or Sir Agrippa, for profound
And solid lying much renown'd :³

himself communicated to Adam in paradise. The second line was probably intended to burlesque the Geneva translation of the Bible, published with notes, 1599, which, in the third of Genesis, says of Adam and Eve, "they sewed fig-leaves together, and made themselves breeches." In Mr. Butler's character of an hermetic philosopher (Genuine Remains vol. ii. p. 227) we read: "he derives the pedigree of magic from "Adam's first green breeches; because fig-leaves being the first cloaths "that mankind wore, were only used for covering, and therefore are "the most antient monuments of concealed mysteries."¹ "Ideas, according to my philosophy, are not in the soul, but in a "superior intelligible nature, wherein the soul only beholds and con- "templates them. And so they are only objectively in the soul, or tan- "quam in cognoscente, but really elsewhere, even in the intelligible "world, that κόσμος νοητὸς which Plato speaks of, to which the soul "is united, and where she beholds them." See Mr. Norris's Letter to Mr. Dodwell, concerning the immortality of the soul of man, p. 114. ² See the antient and modern customs of the Irish, in Camden's Britannia, and Speed's Theatre. Here the poet may use his favourite figure, the anticlimax. Yet I am not certain whether Mr. Butler did not mean, in earnest, to call the Irish learned: for, in the age of St. Pa- trick, the Saxons flocked to Ireland as to the great mart of learning. We find it often mentioned in our writers, that such an one was sent into Ireland to be educated. Sulgenus, who flourished about six hun- dred years ago —

Exemplo patrum commotus amore legendi
Ivit ad Hibernos, sophiā mirabile claros.

In Mr. Butler's MS. common place book he says, "When the Saxons "invaded the Britons, it is very probable that many fled into foreign "countries, to avoid the fury of their arms (as the Veneti did into the "islands of the Adriatic sea, when Attila invaded Italy), and some, if "not most into Ireland, who carried with them that learning which the "Romans had planted here, which, when the Saxons had nearly extin- "guished it in this island, flourished at so high a rate there, that most "of those nations, among whom the northern people had introduced "barbarism, beginning to recover a little civility, were glad to send "their children to be instructed in religion and learning, into Ireland."³ Sir Agrippa was born at Cologn, ann. 1486, and knighted for his military services under the Emperor Maximilian. When very young, he published a book De Occultâ Philosophiâ, which contains almost all the stories that ever roguery invented, or credulity swallowed, concerning the operations of magic. But Agrippa was a man of great worth and honour, as well as of great learning; and in his riper years was thoroughly ashamed of this book; nor is it to be found in the folio edition of his works. — In his preface he says, "Si alicii erratum sit, sive quid liberius dictum, ignoscite adolescentiae nostrae, qui minor quam adolescentis hoc opus composui: ut possim me excusare, ac dicere, dum eram parvulus, loquebar ut parvulus, factus autem vir, evacuavi que erant parvuli; ac in libro de vanitate scientiarum hunc librum magna ex parte retractavi." — Paulus Jovius in his "Elogia doctorum Virorum," says Sir Agrippa, "a Cæsare eruditionis ergo equestri ordinis dignitate honestatus." p. 237. Bayle, in his "Dictionary v. Agrippa, note O, says that the fourth book was untruly ascribed to Agrippa.

1 Anthroposophus was a nickname given to one Thomas Vaughan, Rector of Saint Bridge's, in Bedfordshire, and author of a discourse on the nature of man in the state after death, entitled, Anthroposophia themagica. — "A treatise," says Dean Swift, "written about fifty years ago, by a Welch gentleman of Cambridge: his name as I remember, was Vaughan, as appears by the answer to it written by the learned Dr. Henry Moor: it is a piece of the most unintelligible fustian that perhaps was ever published in any language."

Robert Floud, a native of Kent, and son of Sir Thomas Floud, Treasurer of War to Queen Elizabeth, was Doctor of Physic of St. John's College, Oxford, and much given to occult philosophy. He wrote an apology for the Rosycrucians, also a system of physics, called the Mosaic Philosophy, and many other obscure and mystical tracts. Monsieur Rapin says, that Floud was the Paracelsus of philosophers, as Paracelsus was the Floud of physicians. His opinions were thought worthy of a serious confutation by Gassendi. Jacob Behmen was an impostor and enthusiast, of somewhat an earlier date, by trade, I believe, a cobler. Mr. Law, who revived some of his notions, calls him a Theosopher. He wrote unintelligibly in dark mystical terms.

2 The Rosycrucians were a sect of heretical philosophers. The name appears to be derived from ros dew, and crux a cross. Dew was supposed to be the most powerful solvent of gold; and a cross contains the letters which compose the word lux, light, called, in the jargon of the sect, the seed, or menstruum of the red dragon; or, in other words, that gross and corporeal light, which, properly modified, produces gold. They owed their origin to a German gentleman, called Christian Rosen-cruz; and from him likewise, perhaps, their name of Rosycrucians,
He understood the speech of birds
As well as they themselves do words;
Could tell what subtlest parrots mean,
That speak and think contrary clean;
What member 'tis of whom they talk,
When they cry Rope — and Walk, Knave, walk.

though they frequently went by other names, such as the Illuminati, the Immortales, the Invisible Brothers. This gentleman had travelled to the Holy Land in the fourteenth century, and formed an acquaintance with some eastern philosophers. They were noticed in England before the beginning of the last century. Their learning had a great mixture of enthusiasm; and as Lemery, the famous chymist, says, "it was an art "without an art, whose beginning was lying, whose middle was labour, "and whose end was beggary." Mr. Hales, of Eton, concerning the weapon salve, p. 282, says, "a merry gullery put upon the world; a "guild of men, who style themselves the brethren of the Rosycross, a "fraternity, who, what, or where they are, no man yet, no not they "who believe, admire, and devote themselves unto them, could ever "discover." — See Chaufepié's Dict. v. Jungius, note D. and Brucker. Hist. Critic. Phil. iv. 1. p. 736. Naudseus and Mosheim. Inst. Hist. Christ. recent. sec. 17. i. 4. 28.—Lore, i. e. science, knowledge, from Anglo-Saxon, learn, lærán to teach.

† The senate and people of Abderea, in their letter to Hippocrates, give it as an instance of the madness of Democritus, that he pretended to understand the language of birds. Porphyry, de abstinentiá, lib. iii. cap. 3. contends that animals have a language, and that men may understand it. He instances in Melampus and Tiresias of old, and Apollonius of Tyana, who heard one swallow proclaim to the rest, that by the fall of an ass a quantity of wheat lay scattered upon the road. — I believe swallows do not eat wheat. [Certainly not.] Philostratus tells us the same tale, with more propriety, of a sparrow. Porphyry adds, — "a friend assured me that a youth, who was his page, understood "all the articulations of Birds, and that they were all prophetic. But "the boy was unhappily deprived of the faculty; for his mother, fear "ing he should be sent as a present to the emperor, took an opportu "nity, when he was asleep, to piss into his ear." The author of the Targum on Esther says, that Solomon understood the speech of birds.

The reader will be amused by comparing the above lines with Mr. Butler's character of an Hermetic philosopher, in the second volume of his Genuine Remains, published by Mr. Thyer, p. 225, a character which contains much wit. Mr. Bruce in his Travels, vol. ii. p. 243. says, There was brought into Abyssinia a bird called Para, about the bigness of a hen, and spoke all languages, Indian, Portuguese, and Arabic. It named the king's name; although its voice was that of a man, it could neigh like a horse, and mew like a cat, but did not sing like a bird — from an Historian of that country.—In the year 1655, a book was printed in London, by John Stafford, intitled, Ornithologie, or the Speech of Birds, to which probably Mr. Butler might allude.

2 This probably alludes to some parrot, that was taught to cry rogue, knave, a rope, after persons as they went along the street. The same is He'd extract numbers out of matter,¹
And keep them in a glass, like water,
Of sov'reign pow'r to make men wise;²
For, dropt in blear, thick-sighted eyes,
They'd make them see in darkest night,
Like owls, tho' purblind in the light.
By help of these, as he profest,
He had first matter seen undrest:
He took her naked, all alone,
Before one rag of form was on.³
The chaos too he had descried,
And seen quite thro', or else he ly'd:
Not that of pasteboard, which men shew
For groats, at fair of Barthol'mew;⁴
But its great grandsire, first o' th' name,
Whence that and Reformation came,
Both cousin-germans, and right able T'inveigle and draw in the rabble:
But Reformation was, some say,
O' th' younger house to puppet-play.⁵

often practised now, to the great offence of many an honest countryman, who when he complains to the owner of the abuse, is told by him, take care, Sir, my parrot prophesies—this might allude to more members than one of the house of commons.
¹ Every absurd notion, that could be picked up from the ancients, was adopted by the wild enthusiasts of our author's days. Plato, as Aristotle informs us, Metaph. lib. i. c. 6. conceived numbers to exist by themselves, beside the sensibles, like accidents without a substance.
Pythagoras maintained that sensible things consisted of numbers. Ib.
lib. xi. c. 6. And see Plato in his Cratylus.
² The Pythagorean philosophy held that there were certain mystical charms in certain numbers.
Plato held whatso'er incumbers,
Or strengthens empire, comes from numbers.
Butler's MS.
³ Thus Cleveland, page 110. "The next ingredient of a diurnal is plots, horrible plots, which with wonderful sagacity it hunts dry foot, while they are yet in their causes, before materia prima can put on her smock."
⁴ The puppet-shews, sometimes called Moralities, exhibited the chaos, the creation, the flood, &c.
⁵ It has not been unusual to compare hypocrites to puppets, as not
He could foretell what's ever was,
By consequence, to come to pass:
As death of great men, alterations,
Diseases, battles, inundations:
All this without th' eclipse of th' sun,
Or dreadful comet, he hath done
By INWARD LIGHT, a way as good,
And easy to be understood:
But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the stars depose,
Like knights o' th' post, and falsely charge
Upon themselves what others forge;
As if they were consenting to
All mischief in the world men do:
Or, like the devil, did tempt and sway 'em
To rogneries, and then betray 'em.
They'll search a planet's house, to know
Who broke and robb'd a house below;
Examine Venus and the Moon,
Who stole a thimble and a spoon;

being what they seemed and pretended, nor having any true meaning or real consciousness in what they said or did. I remember two passages, written about our author's time, from one of which he might possibly take the hint. "Even as statues and puppets do move their eyes, their hands, their feet, like unto living men; and yet are not living actors, because their actions come not from an inward soul, the fountain of life, but from the artificial poise of weights when set by the workmen; even so hypocrites." Mr. Mede.

Bishop Laud said, "that some hypocrites, and seeming mortified men that hold down their heads, were like little images that they place in the bowing of the vaults of churches, that look as if they held up the church, and yet are but puppets."

The first plays acted in England were called Mysteries, their subjects were generally scripture stories, such as the Creation, the Deluge, the Birth of Christ, the Resurrection, &c. &c. this sort of puppet-shew induced many to read the Old and New Testament; and is therefore called the Elder Brother of the Reformation.

1 Knights of the post were infamous persons, who attended the courts of justice, to swear for hire to things which they knew nothing about. In the 14th and 15th century the common people were so profligate, that not a few of them lived by swearing for hire in courts of justice. See Henry's History of England, and Wilkin. Concil. p. 534.
And tho' they nothing will confess,
Yet by their very looks can guess,
And tell what guilty aspect bodes,
Who stole, and who receiv'd the goods:
They'll question Mars, and, by his look,
Detect who 'twas that nimm'd a cloke;
Make Mercury confess, and 'peach
Those thieves which he himself did teach.

They'll find, i' th' physiognomies
O' th' planets, all men's destinies;
Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill,
Cast the nativity o' th' question,
And from positions to be guest on,
As sure as if they knew the moment
Of Native's birth, tell what will come on't.

They'll feel the pulses of the stars,
To find out agues, coughs, catarrhs:
And tell what crisis does divine
The rot in sheep, or mange in swine:
In men, what gives or cures the itch,
What made them cuckold, poor, or rich;

1 This, and the following lines, are a very ingenious burlesque upon astrology, to which many in those days gave credit.
2 Mercury was supposed by the poets to be the patron, or god of thieves.
3 This alludes to a well known story told in Henry Stephens's apology for Herodotus. A physician having prescribed for a countryman, gave him the paper on which he had written, and told him, he must be sure to take that, meaning the potion he had therein ordered. The countryman, misunderstanding the doctor, wrapt up the paper like a bolus, swallowed it, and was cured.
4 When any one came to an astrologer to have his child's nativity cast, and had forgotten the precise time of its birth, the figure-caster took the position of the heavens at the minute the question was asked.
Mr. Butler, in his character of an hermetic philosopher, (see Genuine Remains, vol. ii. p. 241.) says, "learned astrologers observing the impossibility of knowing the exact moment of any man's birth, do use " very prudently to cast the nativity of the question (like him that " swallowed the doctor's bill instead of the medicine), and find the answer as certain and infallible, as if they had known the very instant " in which the native, as they call him, crept into the world."
What gains, or loses, hangs, or saves,
What makes men great, what fools, or knaves;
But not what wise, for only of those
The stars, they say, cannot dispose,¹
No more than can the astrologians:
There they say right, and like true Trojans.
This Ralpho knew, and therefore took
The other course, of which we spoke.²

Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge per'rous shrewd.
Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right.
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit:
Their valours too, were of a rate,
And out they sally'd at the gate.
Few miles on horseback had they jogged,
But fortune unto them turn'd dogged;
For they a sad adventure met,
Of which we now prepare to treat:
But ere we venture to unfold
Achievements so resolv'd, and bold,
We should, as learned poets use,
Invoke th' assistance of some muse;³
However critics count it siller,
Than jugglers talking t' a familiar:

¹ Sapiens dominabitur aethris, was an old proverb among the astrologers. Bishop Warburton observes, that the obscurity in these lines arises from the double sense of the word dispose; when it relates to the stars, it signifies influence; when it relates to astrologers, it signifies deceit.
² Ralpho did not take to astrological, but to religious imposture; the author intimating that wise men were sometimes deceived by this.
³ Butler could not omit burlesquing the solemn invocations with which poets address their Muses. In like manner Juvenal, going to describe Domitian's great turbot, ludicrously invokes the assistance of the Muses in his fourth satire.
We think 'tis no great matter which,¹
They're all alike, yet we shall pitch
On one that fits our purpose most,
Whom therefore thus we do accost: —
Thou that with ale, or viler liquors,
Didst inspire Withers, Pryn, and Vickars,²

¹ Bishop Warburton thinks it should be read, They think, that is the critics.
² The Rev. Mr. Charles Dunster, the learned and ingenious translator of the Frogs of Aristophanes, and the Editor of Phillips's Cider, has taken some pains to vindicate the character of Withers as a poet. Party might induce Butler to speak slightly of him; but he seems to wonder why Swift, and Granger in his Biographical History, should hold him up as an object of contempt. His works are very numerous, and Mr. Granger says, his Eclipses are esteemed the best; but Mr. Dunster gives a few lines from his Britain's Remembrancer, a poem in eight Cantos, written upon occasion of the plague, which raged in London in the year 1625, which bear some resemblance to eastern poetry: two pieces of his, by no means contemptible, are published among the old English ballads, and extracts chiefly lyrical, from his Juvenilia, were printed in 1785, for J. Sewell, Cornhill.

George Withers died 1667, aged 79. — For a further account of him, see Kennet's Register and Chronicle, page 648: He is mentioned in Hudibras, Part ii. Canto iii. 1. 169.

The extract from his Britanu's Remembrancer here follows, which, Mr. Dunster says, may perhaps challenge, "comparison with any instance of the θύος απὸ ἀγχανής in ancient or modern poetry."

——— it proved
A crying sin, and so extremely mov'd
God's gentleness, that angry he became:
His brows were bended, and his eyes did flame.
Methought I saw it so; and though I were Afraid within his presence to appear,
My soul was rais'd above her common station,
Where, what ensues, I view'd by contemplation.

There is a spacious round, which bravely rears
Her arch above the top of all the spheres,
Until her bright circumference doth rise
Above the reach of man's, or angel's eyes,
Conveying, through the bodies chrystalline,
Those rays which on our lower globes do shine;
And all the great and lesser orbs do lie
Within the compass of their canopy.

In this large room of state is fix'd a throne,
From whence the wise Creator looks upon
His workmanship, and thence doth hear and see
All sounds, all places, and all things that be:
Here sat the king of gods, and from about
His eye-lids so much terror sparkled out,
And force them, though it were in spite
Of Nature, and their stars, to write;
Who, as we find in sullen writs,¹
And cross-grain'd works of modern wits,
With vanity, opinion, want,
The wonder of the ignorant,
The praises of the author, penn'd
By himself, or wit-insuring friend;²
The itch of picture in the front,³
With bays, and wicked rhyme upon't,
All that is left o' th' forked hill⁴
To make men scribble without skill;
Canst make a poet, spite of fate,
And teach all people to translate;

That every circle of the heavens it shook,
And all the world did tremble at his look:
The prospect of the sky, that erst was clear,
Did with a low'ring countenance appear;
The troubled air before his presence fled,
The earth into her bosom shrunk her head;
The deeps did roar, the heights did stand amaz'd;
The moon and stars upon each other gaz'd;
The sun did stand unmoved in his path,
The host of Heaven was frightened at his wrath;
And with a voice, which made all nature quake,
To this effect the great Eternal spake.

Canto i. p. 17.

¹ That is, ill-natured satirical writings.
² He very ingeniously ridicules the vanity of authors who prefix commendatory verses to their works.
³ Milton, who had an high opinion of his own person, is said to have been angry with the painter or engraver for want of likeness, or perhaps for want of grace, in a print of himself prefixed to his juvenile poems. He expressed his displeasure in four iambics, which have, indeed, no great merit, and lie open to severe criticism, particularly on the word ἐνσμίμησα.
⁴ That is, Parnassus.

"Ἀμαθεὶς γεγράφθαι χειρὶ τῆν ζῇ μεν εἰκόνα
Φαίγεις ταχὺ ὕπνυ, πρὸς ιδως αὐτοφοις βλέπων.
Τὸν ε' ἐκτυπωτόν οἷκ ἐπιγγύντες, φίλοι,
Γελάτε φαῦλον ἐνσμίμησα ζωγράφον."
Though out of languages, in which
They understand no part of speech;
Assist me but this once, I 'mpleare,
And I shall trouble thee no more.

In western clime there is a town,
To those that dwell therein well known,
Therefore there needs no more be said here,
We unto them refer our reader;
For brevity is very good,

When w' are, or are not understood.

To this town people did repair
On days of market, or of fair,
And to crack'd fiddle, and hoarse tabor,
In merriment did drudge and labour;
But now a sport more formidable

Had rak'd together village rabble:
'Twas an old way of recreating,
Which learned butchers call bear-baiting;
A bold advent'rous exercise,
With ancient heroes in high prize;
For authors do affirm it came
From Isthmian or Nemean game;
Others derive it from the bear
That's fix'd in northern hemisphere,
And round about the pole does make

A circle, like a bear at stake,
That at the chain's end wheels about,
And overturns the rabble-rout:
For after solemn proclamation,

In the bear's name, as is the fashion,

---

1 He probably means Brentford, about eight miles west of London. See Part ii. Cant. iii. v. 996.
2 If we are understood, more words are unnecessary; if we are not likely to be understood, they are useless. Charles II. answered the Earl of Manchester with these lines, only changing very for ever, when he was making a long speech in favour of the dissenters.
3 The proclamation here mentioned, was usually made at bear or
According to the law of arms,
To keep men from inglorious harms,
That none presume to come so near
As forty feet of stake of bear;
If any yet be so fool-hardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy,
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a maim,
Altho' the bear gain much, b'ing bound
In honour to make good his ground,
When he's engag'd, and take no notice,
If any press upon him, who 'tis, 695
But lets them know, at their own cost,
That he intends to keep his post.
This to prevent, and other harms,
Which always wait on feats of arms,
For in the hurry of a fray
'Tis hard to keep out of harm's way.
Thither the Knight his course did steer, 700
To keep the peace 'twixt dog and bear,
As he believ'd he was bound to do
In conscience, and commission too; 1
And therefore thus bespoke the Squire: —

We that are wisely mounted higher bull-baiting. See Plot's Staffordshire, 439. Solemn proclamation made by the steward, that all manner of persons give way to the bull, or bear, none being to come near him by 40 feet.

1 The Presbyterians and Independents were great enemies to those sports with which the country people amused themselves. Mr. Hume, in the last volume of his History of England, (Manners of the Commonwealth, chap. iii. anno. 1660. page 119.) says, "All recreations were in "a manner suspended, by the rigid severity of the Presbyterians and In- "dependents: even bear-baiting was esteemed heathenish and unchris- "tian: the sport of it, not the inhumanity, gave offence. Colonel "Hewson, from his pious zeal, marched with his regiment into London, "and destroyed all the bears which were there kept for the diversion "of the citizens. This adventure seems to have given birth to the "fiction of Hudibras."
Than constables in curule wit,
When on tribunal bench we sit,\(^1\)
Like speculators, should foresee,
From Pharos of authority,
Portended mischiefs farther than Low proletarian tything-men:\(^2\)
And therefore being inform'd by bruit,
That dog and bear are to dispute,
For so of late men fighting name,
Because they often prove the same;
For where the first does hap to be,
The last does coincidere.
Quantum in nobis, have thought good
To save th' expence of Christian blood,
And try if we, by mediation
Of treaty, and accommodation,
Can end the quarrel, and compose
The bloody duel without blows.

Are not our liberties, our lives,
The laws, religion, and our wives,
Enough at once to lie at stake
For cov'nant, and the cause's sake?\(^3\)
But in that quarrel dogs and bears,
As well as we, must venture theirs?

\(^1\) We that are in high office, and sit on the bench by commission as justices of the peace.—Some of the chief magistrates in Rome, as aedile, censor, praetor and consul, were said to hold curule offices, from the chair of state or chariot they rode in, called sella curulis.

\(^2\) Proletarii were the lowest class of people among the Romans, who had no property, so called a munere officioque prolis edendae, as if the only good they did to the state were in begetting children. Tythingman, that is, a kind of inferior or deputy constable.

\(^3\) Covenant means the solemn league and covenant drawn up by the Scotch, and subscribed by many of the sectaries in England, who were fond of calling their party The Cause, or the greatest cause in the world. They professed they would not forsake it for all the parliaments upon earth. One of their writers says, "Will not the abjurers of the cove-nant, of all others, be the chief of sinners, whilst they become guilty of no less sin, than the very sin against the Holy Ghost?"
This feud, by Jesuits invented,¹
By evil counsel is fomented;
There is a Machiavilian plot,
Tho' ev'ry nare olfact it not,²
And deep design in't to divide
The well-affected that confide,
By setting brother against brother,
To claw and curry one another.
Have we not enemies plus satis,
That cane et angue pejus³ hate us?
And shall we turn our fangs and claws
Upon our own selves, without cause?
That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,⁴
Is plain enough to him that knows
How saints lead brothers by the nose.
I wish myself a pseudo-prophet,⁵
But sure some mischief will come of it,
Unless by providential wit,
Or force, we averruncate⁶ it.

¹ As Don Quixote was always dreaming of chivalry and romances, so it was the great object of our knight to extirpate popery and independency in religion, and to reform and settle the state.
² The knight, in this speech, employs more Latin, and more uncouth phrases, than he usually does. In this line he means—though every nose do not smell it. The character of his language was given before in the ninety-first, and some following lines.
³ A proverbial saying, used by Horace, expressive of a bitter aversion. The punishment for parricide among the Romans was, to be put into a sack with a snake, a dog, and an ape, and thrown into the river.
⁴ Cynarctomachy is compounded of three Greek words, signifying a fight between dogs and bears. The perfect Diurnal of some passages of Parliament from July 24 to July 31, 1643, No. 5. gives an account how the Queen brought from Holland "besides a company of savage ruffians a company of savage bears;" Colonel Cromwell finding the people of Uppingham, in Rutlandshire, baiting them on the Lord's day, and in the height of their sport, caused the bears to be seized, tied to a tree, and shot.
⁵ That is, a false prophet.
⁶ Averruncate, means no more than eradicate, or pluck up.
For what design, what interest,
Can beast have to encounter beast?
They fight for no espoused cause,
Frail privilege, fundamental laws,¹
Nor for a thorough reformation,
Nor covenant, nor protestation,²
Nor liberty of consciences,³
Nor lords' and commons' ordinances;⁴
Nor for the church, nor for church-lands,
To get them in their own no hands;⁵
Nor evil counsellors to bring
To justice, that seduce the king;
Nor for the worship of us men,
Tho' we have done as much for them.

¹ The following lines recite the grounds on which the Parliament began the war against the king, and justified their proceedings afterwards. He called the privileges of parliament frail, because they were so very apt to complain of their being broken. Whatever the king did, or refused to do, contrary to the sentiments, and unsuitable to the designs of parliament, they voted presently a breach of their privilege: his dissenting to any of the bills they offered him was a breach of privilege: his proclaiming them traitors, who were in arms against him, was an high breach of their privilege: and the commons at last voted it a breach of privilege for the house of lords to refuse assent to any thing that came from the lower house.

Both the English and the Scotch, from the beginning of the war, avouched that their whole proceedings were according to the fundamental laws: by which they meant not any statutes or laws in being, but their own sense of the constitution. Thus, after the king's death, the Dutch ambassadors were told, that what the parliament had done against the king was according to the fundamental laws of this nation, which were the best known to themselves.

² The protestation was a solemn vow or resolution entered into, and subscribed, the first year of the long parliament.

³ The early editions have it free liberty of consciences: and this reading Bishop Warburton approves; "free liberty" being, as he thinks, a satirical periphrasis for licentiousness, which is what the author here hints at.

⁴ An ordinance (says Cleveland, p. 109.) is a law still-born, dropt before quickened by the royal assent. 'Tis one of the parliament's by-blows, acts only being legitimate, and hath no more fire than a Spanish gennet, that is begotten by the wind.

⁵ Suppose we read, To get them into their own hands. [Dr. Nash is wrong — no hands here mean paws.]
Th' Egyptians worshipp'd dogs, and for Their faith made fierce and zealous war. 1
Others ador'd a rat, and some
For that church suffer'd martyrdom.
The Indians fought for the truth
Of th' elephant and monkey's tooth; 2
And many, to defend that faith,
Fought it out mordicus to death; 3
But no beast ever was so slight, 4
For man, as for his god, to fight.
They have more wit, alas! and know
Themselves and us better than so:
But we who only do infuse
The rage in them like boute-feus, 5
'Tis our example that instils
In them th' infection of our ills.
For, as some late philosophers
Have well observ'd, beasts that converse
With man take after him, as hogs
Get pigs all the year, and bitches dogs. 6
Just so, by our example, cattle
Learn to give one another battle.

1 See the beginning of the fifteenth satire of Juvenal.
2 The inhabitants of Ceylon and Siam are said to have had in their temples, as objects of worship, the teeth of monkeys and of elephants.
The Portuguese, out of zeal for the Christian religion, destroyed these idols; and the Siamese are said to have offered 700,000 ducats to redeem a monkey's tooth which they had long worshipped. Le Blanc's Travels, and Herbert's Travels. Martinus Scriblerus, of the Origin of Sciences, Swift's Works.
3 Mordicus, valiantly, tooth and nail.
4 That is so weak, so silly.
5 Makers of mischief, exciters of sedition.
6 This faculty is not unfrequently instanced by the ancients, to shew the superior excellence of mankind. Xenophon. Mem. i. 4. 12. A Roman lady seems to have had of the same opinion. " Populia, Marci
"filia, miranti cuidam quid esset quapropter aliae bestiae nunquam ma-
"rem desiderarent nisi cum praegnantes vellet fieri, respondit, bestiae Epist. Quest. lib. v. epist. 3. et Andream Laurent. lib. viii. Hist. Ana-tom. Quæst. 22. ubi causas adducit cur brutæ gravidæ marem non ad-mittunt, ut inter homines mulier.
We read, in Nero’s time, the Heathen,
When they destroy’d the Christian brethren,
They sew’d them in the skins of bears,
And then set dogs about their ears;
From whence, no doubt, th’ invention came
Of this lewd antichristian game.

To this, quoth Ralpho, verily
The point seems very plain to me;
It is an antichristian game,
Unlawful both in thing and name.
First, for the name; the word bear-baiting
Is carnal, and of man’s creating;
For certainly there’s no such word
In all the Scripture on record;
Therefore unlawful, and a sin;¹
And so is, secondly, the thing:
A vile assembly ’tis, that can
No more be prov’d by Scripture, than Provincial, classic, national;²
Mere human creature-cobwebs all.

¹ Some of the disciplinarians held, that the Scriptures were full and express on every subject, and that every thing was sinful which was not there ordered to be done. Some of the Huguenots refused to pay rent to their landlords, unless they would produce a text of Scripture directing them to do so.

² At a meeting of Cartwright, Travers, and other dissenting ministers in London, it was resolved, that such names as did savour either of Paganism or Popery should not be used, but only Scripture names: accordingly Snape refused to baptise a child by the name of Richard.

This reminds me of a story I have heard, and which, perhaps, is recorded among Joe Miller’s Jests, of a countryman going along the street, in the time of Cromwell, and enquiring the way to St. Anne’s church — the person enquired of, happening to be a presbyterian, said, he knew no such person as Saint Anne; going a little farther, he asked another man which was the way to Anne’s church? he being a cavalier, said, Anne was a Saint before he was born, and would be after he was hanged, and gave him no information.

² Ralpho here shews his independent principles, and his aversion to the presbyterian forms of church government. If the squire had adopted the knight’s sentiments, this curious dispute could not have Thirdly, It is idolatrous;
For when men run a-whoring thus
With their inventions,¹ whatsoe'er
The thing be, whether dog or bear,
It is idolatrous and pagan,
No less than worshipping of dagon.

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat;
Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate:
For though the thesis which thou lay'st
Be true, ad amussim,² as thou say'st;
For the bear-baiting should appear,
Jure divino, lawfuller
Than synods are, thou dost deny,
Totidem verbis — so do I;
Yet there's a fallacy in this;
For if by sly homoeosis,³ Thou wouldst sophistically imply
Both are unlawful — I deny.

And I, quoth Ralpho, do not doubt
But bear-baiting may be made out,
In gospel-times, as lawful as is Provincial, or parochial classis;
And that both are so near of kin,
And like in all, as well as sin,
That, put 'em in a bag and shake 'em,
Youself o' th' sudden would mistake 'em,
And not know which is which, unless
You measure by their wickedness;
For 'tis not hard t' imagine whether
O' th' two is worst, tho' I name neither.

Quoth Hudibras, Thou offer'st much,
But art not able to keep touch.
Mira de lente,¹ as 'tis i' the adage,
Id est, to make a leek a cabbage;
Thou canst at best but overstrain
A paradox, and th' own hot brain;
For what can synods have at all
With bear that's analogical?
Or what relation has debating
Of church-affairs with bear-baiting?
A just comparison still is
Of things ejusdem generis:
And then what genus rightly doth
Include, and comprehend them both?
If animal, both of us may
As justly pass for bears as they;
For we are animals no less,
Although of differ'ent specieses.²
But, Ralpho, this is no fit place,
Nor time, to argue out the case:
For now the field is not far off,
Where we must give the world a proof
Of deeds, not words, and such as suit
Another manner of dispute:

¹ Δεινᾶ περὶ φακῆς: A great stir about nothing.
Great cry and little wool, as they say when any one talks much, and proves nothing. The following lines stand thus, in some editions, viz.

Thou wilt at best but suck a bull,
Or sheer swine, all cry, and no wool.

² Why should we not read, Although of different Species? So also in Part ii. Canto iii. v. 317.
A controversy that affords
Actions for arguments, not words;
Which we must manage at a rate
Of prowess, and conduct adequate
To what our place, and fame doth promise,
And all the godly expect from us.
Nor shall they be deceiv'd, unless
W' are slurr'd andouted by success;
Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit:
For whatsoe'er we perpetrate,
We do but row, w'are steer'd by fate,¹
Which in success of't disinherits,
For spurious causes, noblest merits.
Great actions are not always true sons
Of great and mighty resolutions;
Nor do the bold' st attempts bring forth
Events still equal to their worth;
But sometimes fail, and in their stead
Fortune and cowardice succeed.
Yet we have no great cause to doubt,
Our actions still have borne us out;
Which, tho' they're known to be so ample,
We need not copy from example;
We're not the only persons durst
Attempt this province, nor the first.
In northern clime a val'rous knight ²
Did whilom kill his bear in fight,

¹ The Presbyterians were strong fatalists, and great advocates for predestination. Virgil says, Æn. ix. 1. 95.
O genetrix! quo fata vocas? aut quid petis istis?
Mortaline manu factæ immortale carinæ
Fas habcant?

² Hudibras encourages himself by two precedents; first, that of a gentleman who killed a bear and wounded a fiddler; and secondly, that of Sir Samuel Luke, who had often, as a magistrate, been engaged in similar adventures. He was proud to resemble the one in this particular exploit, and the other in his general character.
CANTO I. ]

HUBIDRAS.

And wound a fiddler: we have both
Of these the objects of our wroth,
And equal fame and glory from
Th' attempt, or victory to come.
'Tis sung, there is a valiant Mamaluke
In foreign land, yeleped 1
To whom we have been oft compar'd
For person, parts, address, and beard;
Both equally reputed stout,
And in the same cause both have fought:
He oft, in such attempts as these,
Came off with glory and success:
Nor will we fail in th' execution,
For want of equal resolution.
Honour is, like a widow, won
With brisk attempts and putting on;
With ent'ring manfully and urging;
Not slow approaches, like a virgin.
This said, as once the Phrygian knight, 2
So ours, with rusty steel did smite

There were several, in those days, who, like Sir Hudibras, set themselves violently to oppose bear-baiting. Oliver Cromwell is said to have shot several bears; and the same is said of Colonel Pride. See note ante, ver. 752, and Harleian Miscellany, vol iii. p. 132.

1 The break is commonly filled up with the name of Sir Samuel Luke. See the note at line 14. The word Mamluck signifies acquired, possessed: and the Mamlukes or Mamalukes were persons carried off, in their childhood, by merchants or banditti, from Georgia, Circassia, Natolia, and the various provinces of the Ottoman empire, and afterwards sold in Constantinople and Grand Cairo. The grandees of Egypt, who had a similar origin, bring them up in their houses. They often rise first to be cachefs or lieutenants: and then to be beys or petty tyrants. Volney's Travels. Thus, in the English civil wars, many rose from the lowest rank in life to considerable power.

2 Laocoön; who, at the siege of Troy, struck the wooden horse with his spear—

Sic fatus, validis ingentem viribus hastam
In latus inque feri curvam compagibus alvum
Contorsit: stetit illa tremens, uteroque recusso
Insoneuere cave gemitumque dedere cavernæ.

Virg. Æneid. ii. 50.
His Trojan horse, and just as much
He mended pace upon the touch;
But from his empty stomach groan'd,
Just as that hollow beast did sound,
And, angry, answer'd from behind,
With brandish'd tail and blast of wind.
So have I seen, with armed heel,
A wight bestride a Common-weal,¹
While still the more he kick'd and spurr'd,
The less the sullen jade has stirr'd.²

¹ Our poet might possibly have in mind a print engraven in Holland. It represented a cow, the emblem of the Common-wealth, with the king of Spain on her back kicking and spurring her; the queen of England before, stopping and feeding her; the prince of Orange milking her; and the duke of Anjou behind pulling her back by the tail. Heylin's Cosmog. After the Spaniards, in a war of forty years, had spent an hundred millions of crowns, and had lost four hundred thousand men, they were forced to acknowledge the independence of the Dutch provinces, and conclude a peace with them: yet, strange to tell, another nation did not grow wise by this example.

² Mr. Butler had been witness to the refractory humour of the nation, not only under the weak government of Richard Cromwell, but in many instances under the more adroit and resolute management of Oliver. Both father and son have been compared to the riders of a restive horse by some loyal songsters: the following lines probably allude to Oliver:—

Nol a rank, rider, got fast in the saddle,
And made her shew tricks, and curvet and rebound:
She quickly perceived he rode widdle waddle,
And like his coach-horse threw his highness to ground.
Then Dick, being lame, rode holding the pummel,
Not having the wit to get hold of the rein:
But the jade did so snort at the sight of a Cromwell,
That poor Dick and his kindred turn'd footmen again.

"Like his coach-horse" is an allusion to an accident that befel the Protector &c. Sept, 29, who must needs drive his coach himself: the horses ran away, and threw him amongst them, whereby he was in great danger.
Hudibras.

Part I. Canto II.
ARGUMENT.

The catalogue and character
Of th' enemies' best men of war,¹
Whom, in a bold harangue, the Knight
Defies, and challenges to fight:
H' encounters Talgol, routs the Bear,
And takes the Fiddler prisoner,
Conveys him to enchanted castle,
There shuts him fast in wooden Bastile.

¹ Butler's description of the combatants resembles the list of warriors in the Iliad and Æneid, and especially the laboured characters in the Theban war, both in Æschylus and Euripides. Septem ad Thebas v. 383. Icetid. v. 362. Phœnis. v. 1139.
CANTO II.

There was an ancient sage philosopher
That had read Alexander Ross over,¹
And swore the world, as he could prove,
Was made of fighting, and of love.

¹ Empedocles, a Pythagorean philosopher and poet, held, that friendship and discord were principles which regulated the four elements that compose the universe. The first occasioned their coalition, the second their separation, or, in the poet's own words, (preserved in Diogen. Laert. edit. Meibom. vol. i. p. 538.)

"Ἀλλ' ὅτε μὲν φιλότητι συνερχόμεν' εἰς ἐν ὑπαντα,
Ἀλλ' ὅτε ε' αὖ δίχ' ἐκαττὰ φορεθεῖνα νείκεος ἐχθεί.

See more in Mer. Casaubon's note on the passage.
The great anachronism increases the humour. Empedocles, the philosopher here alluded to, lived about 2100 years before Alexander Ross.
"Agrigentinum quidem, doctum quendam virum, carminibus græcis vaticinatum ferunt: quæ in rerum natura, totoque mundo consta-rent, quæque moverentur, ea contrahere amicitiam, dissipare discordiam." Cicero de Amicitia.
The Spectator, No. 60, says, he has heard these lines of Hudibras more frequently quoted than the finest pieces of wit in the whole poem: — the jingle of the double rhyme has something in it that tickles the ear — Alexander Ross was a very voluminous writer, and chaplain to
Just so romances are, for what else
Is in them all but love and battles?¹
O' th' first of these w' have no great matter
To treat of, but a world o' th' latter,
In which to do the injur'd right,
We mean in what concerns just fight.
Certes, our Authors are to blame,
For to make some well-sounding name²
A pattern fit for modern knights
To copy out in frays and fights,
Like those that do a whole street raze,³
To build another in the place;
They never care how many others
They kill, without regard of mothers;⁴
Or wives, or children, so they can Make up some fierce, dead-doing man,⁵
Compos'd of many ingredient valours,
Just like the manhood of nine tailors:

Charles the first; but most of his books were written in the reign of James the first. He answered Sir Thomas Brown's Pseudoxia and Religio Medici, under the title of Medicus Medicatus.

¹ Mr. Butler, in his MS. Common Place-book, says,
Love and fighting is the sum
Of all romances, from Tom Thumb
To Arthur, Gondibert, and Hudibras.

Of lovers, the poet in his MS. says,
Lovers, like wrestlers, when they do not lay
Their hold below the girdle, use fair play.

He adds in prose — Although Love is said to overcome all things, yet at long-run, there is nothing almost that does not overcome Love; whereby it seems, Love does not know how to use its victory.

² Γλαυκὸν τε, Μίδοντά τε, Θερσίλοχον τε. — Homer. 17. 219.

Copied exactly by Virgil. Æn. vi. 483.

Glaucumque, Medontaque, Thersilochumque.

This is imitated in all the romances of our author's time.

³ Alluding to the Protector Somerset, who, in the reign of Edward VI. pulled down two churches, part of St. Paul's, and three bishop's houses, to build Somerset House in the Strand.

⁴ bellaque matribus

Detestata — Hor. b. i. od. 1.

⁵ Thus Beaumont and Fletcher — "Stay thy dead-doing hand."
So a wild Tartar, when he spies
A man that's handsome, valiant, wise,
If he can kill him, thinks t' inherit
His wit, his beauty, and his spirit;
As if just so much he enjoy'd,
As in another is destroy'd:
For when a giant's slain in fight,
And mow'd o'erthwart, or cleft downright,
It is a heavy case, no doubt,
A man should have his brains beat out,
Because he's tall, and has large bones,
As men kill beavers for their stones.²
But, as for our part, we shall tell
The naked truth of what befell,
And as an equal friend to both
The Knight and Bear, but more to troth;³
With neither faction shall take part,
But give to each a due desert,
And never coin a formal lie on't,
To make the Knight o'ercome the giant.
This b'ing profest, we've hopes enough,
And now go on where we left off.
They rode, but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot,

¹ In Carazan, a province to the north-east of Tartary, Dr. Heylin says, "they have an use, when any stranger comes into their houses of "an handsome shape, to kill him in the night; not out of desire of "spoil, or to eat his body; but that the soul of such a comely person "might remain among them."

² That beavers bite off their testicles is a vulgar error: but what is here implied is true enough, namely, that the testes, or their capsulae, furnish a medicinal drug of value.

—imitatus castora qui se
Eunuchum ipse facit, cupiens evadere damno
Testiculorum; adeo medicatum intelligit inguen.
Juvenal. Sat. xii. l. 34.

³ "Amicus Socrates, amicus Plato, sed magis amica veritas."
That is to say, whether tollutation,
As they do term't, or succussion,¹
We leave it, and go on, as now
Suppose they did, no matter how;
Yet some, from subtle hints, have got Mysterious light it was a trot:
But let that pass; they now begun
To spur their living engines on:
For as whipp'd tops and handy'd balls,
The learned hold, are animals;²
So horses they affirm to be
Merc engines made by geometry,
And were invented first from engines,
As Indians Britains were from Penguins.³

¹ Tollutation is pacing, or ambling, moving per latera, as Sir Thomas Brown says, that is, lifting both legs of one side together — Succussion, or trotting, that is, lifting one foot before, and the cross foot behind.

² The atomic philosophers Democritus, Epicurus, &c. and some of the moderns likewise, as Des Cartes, Hobbes, and others, will not allow animals to have a spontaneous and living principle in them, but maintain that life and sensation are generated out of matter, from the contexture of atoms, or some peculiar composition of magnitudes, figures, sites, and motions, and consequently that they are nothing but local motion and mechanism. By which argument tops and balls, whilst they are in motion, seem to be as much animated as dogs and horses. Mr. Boyle, in his Experiments, printed in 1659, observes how like animals (men excepted) are to mechanical instruments.

³ This is meant to burlesque the idea of Mr. Selden, and others, that America had formerly been discovered by the Britons or Welsh; which they had inferred from the similarity of some words in the two languages; Penguin, the name of a bird, with a white head in America, in British signifies a white rock. Mr. Selden, in his note on Drayton's Polyolbion, says, that Madoc, brother to David ap Owen, prince of Wales, made a sea voyage to Florida, about the year 1170.

David Powell, in his history of Wales reporteth, that one Madoc, son of Owen Gwinedsh, Prince of Wales, some hundred years before Columbus discovered the West Indies, sailed into those parts, and planted a colony. The simile runs thus; horses are said to be invented from engines, and things without sense and reason, as Welshmen, are said to have sailed to the Indies; both upon the like grounds, and with as much probability.

My worthy and ingenious friend Mr. Pennant, though zealous for the honour of his native country, yet cannot allow his countrymen the merit of his having sailed to America before the time of Columbus:
So let them be, and, as I was saying,
They their live engines ply'd, not staying
Until they reach'd the fatal champaign
Which th' enemy did then encamp on;
The dire Pharsalian plain, where battle
Was to be wag'd 'twixt puissant cattle,
And fierce auxiliary men,
That came to aid their brethren;
Who now began to take the field,
As knight from ridge of steed beheld.
For, as our modern wits behold,
Mounted a pick-back on the old, much farther off, much farther he Rais'd on his aged beast, could see;
Yet not sufficient to descry All postures of the enemy:
Wherefore he bids the squire ride further,
T' observe their numbers, and their order;
That when their motions they had known,
He might know how to fit his own.
Mean-while he stopp'd his willing steed,
To fit himself for martial deed:

the proper name of these birds, saith he, (Philosoph. Transactions, vol. lviii. p. 96.) is Pinguin, propter pinguedinem, on account of their fatness: it has been corrupted to Penguen, so that some have imagined it a Welsh word, signifying a white head: besides, the two species of birds that frequent America under that name, have black heads, not white ones.

Our poet rejoices in an opportunity of laughing at his old friend Sed- den, and ridiculing some of his eccentric notions.

1 That is, Hudibras and his Squire spurred their horses.
2 Alluding to Pharsalia, where Julius Cæsar gained his signal victory.
3 The last word is lengthened into brethcren, for metre sake.
4 Ridiculing the disputes formerly subsisting between the advocates for ancient and modern learning. Sir William Temple, observes: that as to knowledge, the moderns must have more than the ancients, because they have the advantage both of theirs and their own: which is commonly illustrated by a dwarf standing upon a giant's shoulders, and therefore seeing more and further than the giant.
Both kinds of metal he prepar'd,
Either to give blows, or to ward;
Courage and steel, both of great force,
Prepar'd for better, or for worse.

His death-charg'd pistols he did fit well,
Drawn out from life-preserving vittle;¹
These being prim'd, with force he labour'd
To free's blade from retentive scabbard;
And after many a painful pluck,
From rusty durance he bail'd tuck:
Then shook himself, to see what prowess
In scabbard of his arms sat loose;
And, rais'd upon his desp'rate foot,
On stirrup-side he gaz'd about,²
Portending blood, like blazing star,
The beacon of approaching war.³
The Squire advanc'd with greater speed
Than could b' expected from his steed;⁴
But far more in returning made;
For now the foe he had survey'd,
Rang'd, as to him they did appear,
With van, main battle, wings, and rear.
I' th' head of all this warlike rabble,
Crowdero march'd expert and able.⁵

¹ The reader will remember how the holsters were furnished.
The antithesis between death-charg'd pistols, and life-preserving vittle, is a kind of figure much used by Shakespear, and the poets before Mr. Butler's time; very frequently by Butler himself.
² It appears from c. i. v. 407, that he had but one stirrup.
³ Diri comete, quidni? quia crudelia atque immania, famem, bella, clades, cædes, morbos, eversiones urbiun, regionum vastitates, hominum interitus portendere creduntur.
⁴ In some editions we read.

Ralph rode on with no less speed
Than Hugo in the forest did.

Hugo was aid-de-camp to Gondibert. B. i. c. ii. St. 66.
⁵ This is said, by Sir Roger L'Estrange, to be designed for one Jackson, a milliner, who lived in the New Exchange in the Strand. He had lost a leg in the Parliament's service, and went about fiddling from one
Instead of trumpet, and of drum,
That makes the warrior's stomach come,
Whose noise whets valour sharp, like beer
By thunder turn'd to vinegar;
For if a trumpet sound, or drum beat,
Who has not a month's mind to combat?
A squeaking engine he apply'd
Unto his neck, on north-east side, 1
Just where the hangman does dispose,
To special friends, the fatal noose:
For 'tis great grace, when statesmen straight
Dispatch a friend, let others wait.
His warped ear hung o'er the strings,
Which was but souse to chitterlings: 2
For guts, some write, ere they are sodden,
Are fit for music, or for pudden;

ale-house to another: but Butler does not point his satire at such low game. His nick-name is taken from the instrument he used: Crowde, fiddle, crwth, fidicula, in the British language.

1 It is difficult to say, why Butler calls the left the north-east side.
A friend of Dr. Grey's supposes it to allude to the manner of burying; the feet being put to the east, the left side would be to the north, or north-east. Some authors have asserted, and Euseb. Nuremberg, a learned Jesuit, in particular, that the body of man is magnetic; and being placed in a boat, a very small one we must suppose, of cork or leather, will never rest till the head respecteth the north. Paracelsus had also a microcosmical conceit about the body of a man, dividing and differencing it according to the cardinal points; making the face the east, the back the west, &c. of this microcosm: and therefore, working upon human ordure, and by long preparation rendering it odoriferous, he terms it Zibetta occidentalis. Now in either of these positions, the body lying along on its back with its head towards the north, or standing upright with the face towards the east, the reader will find the place of the fiddle on the left breast to be due north-east. One, or both of these conceits, it is probable, our poet had in view; and very likely met with them, as I have done, in a book entitled Brown's Vulgar Errors,
b. ii. ch. 3.

Ovid, dividing the world into two hemispheres, calls one the right hand, and the other the left. The augurs of old, in their divinations, and priests in their sacrifices, turned their faces towards the east; in which posture the north, being the left hand, agrees exactly with the position in which Crowdoro would hold his fiddle.

2 Souse is the pig's ear, and chitterlings are the pig's guts: the former alludes to Crowdoro's ear, which lay upon the fiddle; the latter to the strings of the fiddle, which are made of catgut.
From whence men borrow ev'ry kind
Of minstrelsy, by string or wind.
His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he strung his fiddle-stick;
For he to horse-tail scorn'd to owe
For what on his own chin did grow.
Chiron, the four-legg'd bard, had both
A beard and tail of his own growth;
And yet by authors 'tis averr'd,
He made use only of his beard.

In Staffordshire, where virtuous worth\(^1\)
Does raise the minstrelsy, not birth:
Where bulls do choose the boldest king,
And ruler o'er the men of string,
As once in Persia,\(^2\) 'tis said,
Kings were proclaim'd by a horse that neigh'd;
He, bravely vent'ring at a crown,
By chance of war was beaten down,
And wounded sore: his leg then broke,
Had got a deputy of oak;

---

\(^1\) This alludes to the custom of bull-running in the manor of Tudbury in Staffordshire, where a charter is granted by John of Gaunt, king of Castile and Leon, and duke of Lancaster (and confirmed by inspeximus and grant of Henry VI.) dated 22d of August, in the fourth year of the reign of our most gracious (most sweet, tres dulce) king Richard II. (A. D. 1380) appointing a king of the minstrels or musicians (sive histriones) who is to have a bull for his property, which shall be turned out by the prior of Tudbury, if his minstrels, or any one of them, could cut off a piece of his skin before he runs into Derbyshire; but if the bull gets into that county sound and unhurt, the prior may have his bull again. Exemplification of Henry VI is dated 1442.

This custom being productive of much mischief, was, at the request of the inhabitants, and by order of the duke of Devonshire, lord of the manor, discontinued about the year 1788. See Blount's Ancient Tenures, and Jocular Customs.

\(^2\) This relates to a story told by Herodotus, lib. iii. of the seven princes, who, having destroyed the usurper of the crown of Persia, were all of them in competition for it: at last they agreed to meet on horseback at an appointed place, and that he should be acknowledged sovereign whose horse first neighed: Darius's groom, by a subtle trick, contrived that his master should succeed.
For when a shin in fight is cropt,
The knee with one of timber's propt,
Esteem'd more honourable than the other,
And takes place, tho' the younger brother.

Next march'd brave Orsin, famous for Wise conduct, and success in war;
A skilful leader, stout, severe,
Now marshal to the champion bear.
With truncheon tipp'd with iron head,
The warrior to the lists he led;
With solemn march, and stately pace,
But far more grave and solemn face;
Grave as the Emperor of Pegu,
Or Spanish potentate, Don Diego.

This leader was of knowledge great,
Either for charge, or for retreat:
Knew when t'engage his bear pell-mell,
And when to bring him off as well.
So lawyers, lest the bear defendant,
And plaintiff dog, should make an end on't,
Do stave and tail with writs of error,
Reverse of judgment, and demurrer,
To let them breathe awhile, and then
Cry whoop, and set them on agen.

1 A person with a wooden leg generally puts that leg first in walking.
2 This character was designed for Joshua Goslin, who kept bears at Paris Garden, Southwark, as says Sir Roger L'Estrange in his Key to Hudibras.
3 See Purchas's Pilgrims and Lady's Travels into Spain.
4 Mr. Butler probably took this idea from a book entitled The princely Pleasure of Kenilworth in Warwickshire, in 1575.
5 The comparison of a lawyer with a bearward is here kept up: the one parts his clients, and keeps them at bay by writ of error and de-
As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was dry-nurs'd by a bear,
That fed him with the purchas'd prey
Of many a fierce and bloody fray;
Bred up, where discipline most rare is,
In military garden Paris:

murrer, as the latter does the dogs and the bear, by interposing his staff (hence stave) and holding the dogs by the tails. See the character of a lawyer in Butler's Genuine Remains, vol. ii. p. 164, where the severity and bitterness of the satire, and the verses which follow, may be accounted for by the poet's having married a widow, whom he thought a great fortune, but perhaps, through the unskilfulness or roguery of the lawyer, it being placed on bad security, was lost. This he frequently alludes to in his MS. Common-place Book; he says the lawyer never ends a suit, but prunes it, that it may grow the faster, and yield a greater increase of strife.

The conquering foe they soon assailed,
First Trullia stav'd, and Cerdon tailed.

The improvements in modern practice, and the acuteness of Butler's observation, have been able to add little to the picture left us by Ammianus Marcellinus of the lawyers of ancient Rome. See lib. xxx. cap. iv. Butler's simile has been translated into Latin [by Dr. Harmar, sometime under-master of Westminster School.]

Sic legum mystæ, ne forsan pax foret, Ursam
Inter tutantem sese, actoremque molossum
Fauciûs injiciunt clavos, dentesque refigunt,
Luctantesque canes coxis, remorisque revellunt:
Erores jurisque moras obtendere certi,
Judiciumque prius revocare ut prorsus iniquum.
Tandem post aliquod breve respiramen utrinque,
Ut pugnas iterent, crebris hortatibus urgent.
Ejâ agite o cives, iterumque in prælia trudunt.

1 That is, maintained by the diversion which his bear afforded the rabble. It may allude likewise, as Dr. Grey observes, to the story of Valentine and Orson, ch. iv. where Orson is suckled by a bear, as Romulus was by a wolf.

2 At Paris garden, in Southwark, near the river side, there was a play house, at which Ben Jonson is said to have acted the part of Zuliman; the place was long noted for the entertainment of bear-baiting. The custom of resorting thither was censured by one Crowley, who wrote in the latter time of Henry VIII.—Robert Crowley, I believe, was a Northamptonshire man, of Magdalene College, Oxford, about the year 1534, and 1542. In Bod. Lib. see his 31 Epigrams.

At Paris garden, each Sunday, a man shall not fail
To find two or three hundred for the bearward vale,
One halfpenny a piece they used for to give;
When some have not more in their purses, I believe
Well, at the last day their conscience will declare,
That the poor ought to have all that they may spare.
If you therefore give to see a bear fight,
Be sure God his curse upon you will light.
For soldiers heretofore did grow
In gardens, just as weeds do now,
Until some splay-foot politicians
T' Apollo offer'd up petitions,¹
For licensing a new invention
They'ad found out of an antique engin,
To root out all the weeds, that grow
In public gardens, at a blow,
And leave th' herbs standing. Quoth Sir Sun,²
My friends, that is not to be done.
Not done! quoth Statesmen: Yes, an't please ye,
When 'tis once known you'll say 'tis easy.
Why then let's know it, quoth Apollo:
We'll beat a drum, and they'll all follow.
A drum! quoth Phœbus; Troth, that's true,
A pretty invention, quaint and new:
But tho' of voice and instrument
We are, 'tis true, chief president,
We such loud music don't profess,
The devil's master of that office,
Where it must pass; if't be a drum,
He'll sign it with Cler. Parl. Dom. Com.³

These barbarous diversions continued in fashion till they were suppressed by the fanatics in the civil wars. Bear-baiting was forbid by an act of Parliament 1 Ch. I. which act was continued and enforced by several subsequent acts. James the first instituted a society, which he called of the military garden, for the training of soldiers and practising feats of arms, and as Paris was then the chief place for polite education, some have imagined this place was from thence called the military garden Paris: others suppose it to be called garden Paris from the name of the owner.

¹ The whole passage, here a little inverted, is certainly taken from Boccalini's Advertisement from Parnassus, cent. i. advert. 16. p. 27. ed. 1656, where the gardeners address Apollo, beseeching him, that, as he had invented drums and trumpets, by means of which princes could enlist and destroy their idle and dissolute subjects; so he would teach them some more easy and expeditious method of destroying weeds and noxious plants, than that of removing them with rakes and spades.

³ During the civil wars, the parliament granted patents for new in-
To him apply yourselves, and he will soon dispatch you for his fee. To resume what we discoursing were on before, that is, stout Orsin; that which so oft by sundry writers, has been apply’d t’ almost all fighters, more justly may b’ ascrib’d to this than any other warrior, viz. none ever acted both parts bolder, both of a chieftain and a soldier. He was of great descent, and high for splendor and antiquity, and from celestial origine, deriv’d himself in a right line; not as the ancient heroes did, who, that their base births might be hid, knowing they were of doubtful gender, and that they came in at a windore, made Jupiter himself, and others O’ th’ gods, gallants to their own mothers,

1 The expedient of arming the discontented and unprincipled multitude is adventurous, and often proves fatal to the state.

2 A satire on common characters given by historians.

3 Ion thus addresses his mother Creusa, when she had told him that he was son of Apollo—

Διόν’ ἐλθ’ ἐς οὖς γὰρ τοὺς λόγους εἰπεῖν θέλω,
Καὶ περικαλέψαι τοῖς πράγμασι σκότον.
"Ορά σε, μήτερ, μή σφαλέσαι παρθένος,
Ἐγγίναι νοσήματ’ ἐς κρυπτοῖς γάμους.
"Επιτα τῷ θεῷ προστίθης τὴν αἰτίαν.
Καὶ τούμων αἰσχρών ἀποφθέγμεν περιμένῃ,
Φοίβῳ τεκεῖν με ὀψε, τεκὼσ’ οὐκ ἐκ θεοῦ.

Euripidis Ion 1521.
To get on them a race of champions,
Of which old Homer first made lampoons;
Aretophylax, in northern sphere,
Was his undoubted ancestor;
From whom his great forefathers came,
And in all ages bore his name:
Learn'd he was in med'c'nal lore,
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetic powder,\(^1\)
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder;\(^2\)
By skilful chymist, with great cost,
Extracted from a rotten post;\(^3\)
But of a heav'nlier influence
Than that which mountebanks dispense;
Tho' by Promethean fire made,\(^4\)
As they do quack that drive that trade.
For as when slovens do amiss
At others' doors, by stool or piss,
The learned write, a red-hot spit
B'ing prudently apply'd to it,
Will convey mischief from the dung\(^5\)
Unto the part that did the wrong;
So this did healing, and as sure
As that did mischief, this would cure.
Thus virtuous Orsin was endu'd
With learning, conduct, fortitude

---

\(^1\) Hermetic, i. e. chymical, from Hermes, Mercury; or perhaps so called from Hermes Trismegistus, a famous Egyptian philosopher.

\(^2\) Meaning to banter the sympathetic powder, which was to effect the cure of wounds at a distance. It was much in fashion in the reign of James the first. See Sir Kenelm Digby's discourse touching the cure of wounds by the powder of sympathy, translated from the French by R. White, gent. and printed 1658 — Point-blank is a term in gunnery, signifying an horizontal level.

\(^3\) Useless powders in medicine, are called powders of post.

\(^4\) That is, heat of the sun: so in Canto iii. v. 628. Promethean powder, that is, powder calcined by the sun, for the chief ingredient in sympathetic powder was calcined by the sun.

\(^5\) Still ridiculing the sympathetic powder. See the treatise above mentioned, where the poet's story of the spit is seriously told.
Incomparable; and as the prince
Of poets, Homer, sung long since,
A skilful leech is better far,
Than half a hundred men of war;\(^1\)
So he appear'd, and by his skill,
No less than dint of sword, cou'd kill.
The gallant Bruin march'd next him,
With visage formidably grim,
And rugged as a Saracen,
Or Turk of Mahomet's own kin,\(^2\)
Clad in a mantle de la guerre
Of rough, impenetrable fur;
And in his nose, like Indian king,
He wore, for ornament, a ring;
About his neck a threefold gorget,
As rough as trebled leathern target;
Armed, as heralds cant, and langued,
Or, as the vulgar say, sharp fanged:\(^3\)
For as the teeth in beasts of prey
Are swords, with which they fight in fray,
So swords, in men of war, are teeth,
Which they do eat their vittle with.
He was, by birth some authors write,

---

\(^1\) Ἰητρός γὰρ ἄνηψ πολλῶν ἀντάξιος ἄλλων.
Ἰοῦς τ᾽ ἱκτάμνα, ἐπὶ τ᾽ ἤπτα φάρμακα πάσσων
Homer. Iliad. b. xi. 1. 514.
Leech is the old Saxon term for physician, derived from laec, lac, munus, reward; Chaucer uses the word leechcraft, to express the skill of a physician, and at this day we are accustomed to hear of beast leech, cow leech, &c. The glossary annexed to Gawin Douglas's Virgil says, Leiche, a physician or surgeon, Scot. Leech from the A. S. lacæ, lyce, lack, Isl. lacknære, Goth. leik, medicus, A. S. laenian, laecinian, sanare, curare: laikinon, Belg.

\(^2\) Mr. George Sandys, in his book of Travels, observes, that the Turks are generally well complexioned, of good stature, and the women of elegant beauty, except Mahomet's kindred, who are the most ill-favoured people upon earth, branded, perhaps, by God (says he) for the sin of their seducing ancestor.

\(^3\) Our author here banter's the heralds, as he had before rallied the lawyers and physicians.
VINCENT LE BLANC.

From a Photograph by Miss Faunce.
A Russian, some a Muscovite,
And 'mong the Cossacks had been bred,
Of whom we in diurnals read,
That serve to fill up pages here,
As with their bodies ditches there.

Scrimansky was his cousin-german,¹
With whom he serv'd, and fed on vermin;
And, when these fail'd, he'd suck his claws,
And quarter himself upon his paws:²
Did stew their meat between their bums
And th' horses' backs o'er which they straddle,³
And every man ate up his saddle;
He was not half so nice as they,
But ate it raw when't came in's way.

More than Le Blanc the traveller;

¹ Some favourite bear perhaps. Two of the Roman emperors, Maximilian and Valentinian, gave names to bears, which they kept for the daily pleasure of seeing them devour their subjects. The names of the executioners to Valentinian were Mica Aurea, and Innocentia. Amm. Marcellin. xxix. 3. et Lactant. de mort. persecutorum, cap. 21. The word scrimatur is interpreted rugit, aut buccinat. Du Cange from Papias. Ab iiis diebus resident ac priorium pedum suctu vivunt. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. viii. cap. 54.

² And quarter himself upon his paws. — A word ending in er before another beginning with a vowel, is often considered as ending in re, and cut off accordingly. See P. ii. c. ii. v. 367, and c. iii. v. 192. P. iii. c. i. v. 521. P. ii. c. i. v. 752. P. iii c. i. v. 583. 622. 680. c. ii. v. 108. 468. c. iii. v. 684. Heroical Epistle, v. 284. Lady's Answer, v. 130. So in P. i. c. iii. v. 1286. What's ever assembly's. Thus bowre for bower, that is a chamber. See Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, vol. i. p. 52. The old poets took great liberties in varying the accents and terminations of many words: thus, countrie, ladi, harper, finger, battel, damsel, &c. ibid. p. 37.

³ This fact is related by Ammianus Marcellinus, xxxi. cap. ii. 615. ed. Paris. 1681. With such fare did Azim Khan entertain Jenkinson, and other Englishmen, in their Travels to the Caspian sea from the river Volga.

"Tartaros esse perquam immunidis moribus: si jurulentum aliquid " apponatur in mensam, nulla requirere cochlearia, sed jus volâ manus " haurire; enectorum equorum carnem devorare nullo foco admotam; " offâ tantum sub equestri sella explicare, quibus equino calore tepe- " factis, tanquam opipare conditis, vesci." Busbequii, Ep. iv.
Who writes, he 'spous'd in India,\(^1\)
Of noble house, a lady gay,
And got on her a race of worthies,
As stout as any upon earth is.
Full many a fight for him between\(^2\)
Talgol and Orsin of't had been,
Each striving to deserve the crown
Of a sav'd citizen;\(^3\) the one
To guard his bear, the other fought
To aid his dog; both made more stout
By sev'ral spurs of neighbourhood,
Church-fellow-membership, and blood;\(^4\)
But Talgol, mortal foe to cows,
Never got ought of him but blows;
Blows hard and heavy, such as he
Had lent, repaid with usury.
Yet Talgol was of courage stout,
And vanquish'd oft'ner than he fought;
Inur'd to labour, sweat, and toil,
And, like a champion, shone with oil;\(^5\)
Right many a widow his keen blade,
And many fatherless had made;
He many a boar, and huge dun-cow
Did, like another Guy, o'erthrow;\(^6\)
But Guy, with him in fight compar'd,
Had like the boar or dun-cow far'd:

---

\(^1\) Le Blanc tell this story of Aganda the daughter of Ismation.
\(^2\) for him, That is, on his account.
\(^3\) He, who saved the life of a Roman citizen, was entitled to a civic crown; so in banter, says our author, were Talgol and Orsin, who fought hard to save the lives of the dogs and bears.
\(^4\) Both were of the same fanatic sect, and inured to scenes of cruelty from their employments.
\(^5\) He was a butcher; and as greasy as the Greek and Roman wrestlers, who anointed themselves with oil to make their joints more supple, and prevent strains.
\(^6\) The story of Guy, earl of Warwick, and the dun-cow killed by him at Dunsmore-heath, in Warwickshire, is well known in romance. He lived about the tenth century. A rib of this cow is now shewn in Warwick castle; but more probably it is some bone of a whale.
With greater troops of sheep h' had fought
Than Ajax, or bold Don Quixot;¹
And many a serpent of fell kind,
With wings before, and stings behind,
Subdu'd;² as poets say, long agoone,
Bold Sir George Saint George did the dragon.³
Nor engine, nor device polemic,
Disease, nor doctor epidemic,⁴

¹ Ajax, when mad with rage for having lost the armour of Achilles, attacked and slew a flock of sheep, mistaking them for the Grecian princes. See Sophocles, Ajax. l. 29. Horace, Satire iii. book ii. l. 197. Don Quixote encountered a flock of sheep, and imagined they were the giant Aliparnon of Taprobana.

² Meaning the flies, wasps, and hornets, which prey upon the butchers' meat, and were killed by the valiant Talgol. Fell is a Saxon word, and signifies cruel, deadly: hence the term fellow is used to denote a cruel wicked man: perhaps fellow in a better sense, may signify companion, from feel, fellow-feeling.

³ Sir George, because tradition makes him a soldier as well as a saint: or an hero (eques) as well as a martyr. But all heroes in romance have the appellation of Sir, as Sir Belianis of Greece, Sir Palmerin, &c. As to the patron saint of England, the legendary accounts assign the exploits and sufferings of George the Martyr to the times of Diocletian, or even to an era still earlier, before George, the Arian bishop of Alexandria, was born; and the character given to that prodigal prince, by his contemporaries Amm. Marcellinus, and St. Epiphanius, is in direct variance with the high panegyrick of the pious martyr, by Venantius Fortunatus in Justinian's time. Nor are the narratives of their deaths less inconsistent. All which considerations sufficiently invalidate the unsupported conjecture so invidiously adopted by some, that our guardian saint, instead of a christian hero, was in reality an avaricious and oppressive heretical usurper of Athanasius's see. But to return.

There was a real Sir George St. George, who, with Sir Robert Newcomen, and Major Ormsby, was, in February 1643 (about our poet's time) made commissioner for the government of Connaught; and it is not improbable that this coincidence of names might strike forcibly on the playful imagination of Mr. Butler. It is whimsical too, that George Monk, in a collection of loyal songs, is said to have slain a most cruel dragon, meaning the Rump parliament; or, perhaps, the poet might mean to ridicule the presbyterians, who refused even to call the apostles Peter and Paul saints, much more St. George, but in mockery called them Sir Peter, Sir Paul, Sir George.—The sword of St. George is thus ludicrously described.

His sword would serve for battle, or for dinner, if you please,
When it had slain a Cheshire man 'twould toast a Cheshire cheese.

⁴ The plain meaning is— not military engine, nor stratagem, nor disease, nor doctor epidemic, ever destroyed so many. The inquisition, tortures, or persecutions, have nothing to do here. There is humour
Tho' stored with deleterious medicines,\(^1\)
Which whosoever took is dead since,
E'er sent so vast a colony
To both the under worlds as he;\(^2\)
For he was of that noble trade
That demi-gods and heroes made,\(^3\)
Slaughter and knocking on the head,
The trade to which they all were bred;
And is, like others, glorious when
'Tis great and large, but base, if mean:\(^4\)
The former rides in triumph for it,
The latter in a two-wheel'd chariot,
For daring to profane a thing
So sacred, with vile bungleing.\(^5\)
Next these the brave Magnano came,
Magnano, great in martial fame;
Yet, when with Orsin he wag'd fight,
'Tis sung he got but little by't:

in joining the epithet epidemic to doctor, as well as to the disease; intimating, perhaps, that no constitution of the air is more dangerous than the approach of an itinerant practitioner of physic.

\(\text{Πολλών ἵππων εἰσοδεύς μὴ ἀπολείσειν.}\)

[Ex incerto Comico ap. Grot.]

Thus Juvenal —
Quot Themison ægros autumno occiderit uno.

Sat. x. 221.

Butler in his Genuine Remains, vol. ii. p. 304. says, "a mountebank is defined to be an epidemic physician."

\(^1\) Deletery, noxious, dangerous, from ἐθνίω, ἐθνητήριον.

\(^2\) Virgil, in his sixth Æneid, describes both the Elysian Fields and Tartarus as below, and not far asunder.

\(^3\) Very justly satirizing those that pride themselves on their military achievements. The general who massacres thousands, is called great and glorious; the assassin who kills a single man is hanged at Tyburn.

\(\text{Ile crucem pretium sceleris tulit; hic diadema.}\)

Juvenal. Sat. xiii. 105.

\(^4\) Julius Caesar is said to have fought fifty battles, and to have killed of the Gauls alone, eleven hundred ninety-two thousand men, and as many more in his civil wars. In the inscription which Pompey placed in the temple of Minerva, he professed that he had slain, or vanquished and taken, two millions one hundred and eighty-three thousand men.

\(^5\) The last word is here lengthened into bungleing for the sake of the metre.
Yet he was fierce as forest boar,
Whose spoils upon his back he wore,¹
As thick as Ajax' seven-fold shield,
Which o'er his brazen arms he held;
But brass was feeble to resist
The fury of his armed fist:
Nor could the hardest iron hold out
Against his blows, but they would through't.
In magic he was deeply read,
As he that made the brazen head;²
Profoundly skill'd in the black art,
As English Merlin, for his heart;³

¹ Meaning his hagard made of pig's skin.
² The device of the brazen head, which was to speak a prophecy at a certain time, had by some been imputed to Grossa Testa, bishop of Lincoln, as appears from Gower, the old Welsh poet. [The assertion of Gower's being from Wales is Caxton's; but there is every reason to believe he was of the Gower family of Stitenham in Yorkshire. See Todd's Illustration of the Lives and Writings of Gower and Chaucer.]
³ This alludes to William Lilly the astrologer.—Merlin was a Welsh magician, who lived about the year 500. He was reckoned the prince of enchanters; one that could outdo and undo the enchantments of all others. Spenser, book i. c. vii. 36.

Confessio Amantis, B. iv.

Others supposed that the design of making the brazen head originated with Albertus Magnus. But the generality of writers, and our poet among the rest, have ascribed it to Roger Bacon, a cordelier friar, who flourished in the thirteenth century, and is said to have known the use of the telescope. Mr. Beckwith, in his new edition of Blount's Fragmenta Antiquitatis, supposes Roger Bacon to have been born near Mekenburgh, now Mexborough, in the county of York, and that his famous brazen head was set up in a field at Rothwell, near Leeds.

His great knowledge caused him to be thought a magician, the superior of his order put him in prison on that account, from whence he was delivered, and died A.D. 1292, aged 78. Some, however, believe the story of the head to be nothing more than a moral fable.
But far more skilful in the spheres,
Than he was at the sieve and shears.¹
He cou'd transform himself to colour,
As like the devil as a collier;
As like as hypocrites in show
Are to true saints, or crow to crow.
Of warlike engines he was author,
Devis'd for quick dispatch of slaughter:²
The cannon, blunderbuss, and saker,
He was th' inventor of, and maker:
The trumpet and the kettle-drum
Did both from his invention come.
He was the first that e'er did teach
To make, and how to stop, a breach.³
A lance he bore with iron pike,
Th' one half wou'd thrust, the other strike;
And when their forces he had join'd,
He scorn'd to turn his parts behind.
He Trulla lov'd,⁴ Trulla more bright
Than burnish'd armour of her knight;

¹ The literal sense would be, that he was skilful in the heavenly spheres; that is, was a great astrologer: but a sphere is properly any thing round, and the tinker's skill lay in mending pots and kettles, which are commonly of that shape. There was a kind of divination practised "impia fraude aut anili superstitione" — a sieve was put upon the point of a pair of shears, and expected to turn round when the person or thing inquired after was named. This silly method of applying for information is mentioned by Theocritus, Idyll. 3. It is called Coscinomantia.

² This seems to be introduced to keep up the comparison. Roger Bacon is said to have invented gunpowder. It has been observed, that gunpowder was invented by a priest, and printing by a soldier.

³ Tinkers are said to mend one hole, and make two.

⁴ Trulla is a profligate woman, that follows the camp. Trulla signifies the same in Italian. Casaubon derivates it from the Greek ματριληνη.—
The character is said to have been intended for the daughter of one James Spencer.
A bold virago, stout, and tall,
As Joan of France, or English Mall;¹
Thro' perils both of wind and limb,
Thro' thick and thin she follow'd him
In ev'ry adventure h' undertook,
And never him, or it forsook:
At breach of wall, or hedge surprise,
She shar'd i' th' hazard, and the prize;
At beating quarters up, or forage,
Behav'd herself with matchless courage,
And laid about in fight more busily
Than th' Amazonian Dame Pentesile.²
And tho' some critics here cry Shame,
And say our authors are to blame,
That, spite of all philosophers,
Who hold no females stout but bears,
And heretofore did so abhor
That women should pretend to war,
They would not suffer the stout'st dame
To swear by Hercules his name;³

¹ Joan d'Arc, commonly called the Maid of Orleans, has been sufficiently celebrated in the English histories of the reign of Henry VI. about the year 1428 and 1429.

English Moll was no less famous about the year 1670. Her real name was Mary Carlton; but she was more commonly distinguished by the title of Kentish Moll, or the German princess.—A renowned cheat and pickpocket, who was transported to Jamaica in 1671; and being soon after discovered at large, was hanged at Tyburn, January 22, 1672-3.

Memoirs of Mary Carlton were published 1673. Granger, in his Biographical History, calls her Mary Firth. See vol. ii. p. 408. ed. 8vo.
She was commonly called English Mall. Thus Cleveland, p. 97, “certainly it is under the same notion, as one whose pockets are "picked goes to Mal Cutpurse."

² In the first editions it is printed with more humour Pen-thesile.
See Virgil, Æneid. i. 490.

Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis
Pentesilea furens, mediiisque in millibus ardet,
Aurea subnectens exsertæ cingula mammæ
Bellatrix, audetque viris concurret virgo.

³ The men and women, among the Romans, did not use the same oath, or swear by the same deity; Aulus Gellius, Noctes Attice, lib. xi. cap. 6. but commonly the oath of women was Castor; of men Edepol,
Make feeble ladies, in their works,
To fight like termagants and Turks;
To lay their native arms aside,
Their modesty, and ride astride;
To run a tilt at men, and wield
Their naked tools in open field;
As stout Armida, bold Thalestris,
And she that would have been the mistress
Of Gundibert, but he had grace,
And rather took a country lass:

or Mehercule. According to Macrobius, the men did not swear by Castor, nor the women by Hercules; but Edepol, or swearing by Pollux was common to both.

1 The word termagant now signifies a noisy and troublesome person, especially of the female sex. How it came by this signification I know not. Some derive it from the Latin ter magnus, felix ter et amplius; but Junius thinks it compounded of the Anglo-Saxon τύρ, the superlative or third degree of comparison, and μάγα potens: thus the Saxon word eadeg happy, τύρ eadeg most happy.—In Chaucer's rime of sire Thopas, termagant appears to be the name of a deity. The giant sire Oliphanta, swears by Termagaunt, line 137.41. Bale, describing the threats used by some papist magistrate to his wife, speaks of them as "grenning upon her lyke termagaunts in a playe." And Hamlet in Shakespeare (Act iii. sc. 2.) "I would have such a fellow whipp'd for o'erdoing Termagant, it out-herods Herod." The French romances corrupted the word into tervagant, and from them La Fontaine took it up, and has used it more than once in his Tales. Mr. Tyrwhitt informs us that this Saracen deity, in an old MS. romance in the Bodleian Library, is constantly called Tervagan.

Bishop Warburton very justly observes, that this passage is a fine satire on the Italian epic poets, Ar.osto, Tasso, and others; who have introduced their female warriors, and are followed in this absurdity by Spenser and Davenant.—Bishop Hurd likewise, in his ingenious and elegant Letters on Chivalry, p. 12, says, "one of the strangest circumstances (in old romance) is that of the women warriors. Butler, who saw it in this light, ridicules it, as a most unnatural idea, with great spirit. Yet, in these representations they did but copy from the man-ers of the times. Anna Comnena tells us, that the wife of Robert the Norman fought, side by side, with her husband in his battles."

2 Camden, in his account of Richmond (Article Surrey, vol. i. col. 188.
ed. 1722.) says, that Anne, wife of Richard II. daughter of the emperor Charles IV. taught the English women the present mode of riding, about the year 1388. Before which time they rode astride.—J. Gower, who dates his poem 16 Richard II. 1391 describing a company of ladies on horseback, says, "everich one ride on side." p. 70. a. 2.

3 The princess Rhodalind harboured a secret affection for Gundibert
They say 'tis false, without all sense,
But of pernicious consequence
To government, which they suppose
Can never be upheld in prose:1
Strip nature naked to the skin,
You'll find about her no such thing.
It may be so, yet what we tell
Of Trulla, that's improbable,
Shall be depos'd by those have seen't,
Or, what's as good, produc'd in print;2
And if they will not take our word,
We'll prove it true upon record.

The upright Cerdon next advanc't,3
Of all his race the valiant'st;
Cerdon the Great, renown'd in song,
Like Herc'les, for repair of wrong:
He rais'd the low, and fortify'd
The weak against the strongest side:4

but he was more struck with the charms of the humble Birtha, daughter to the sage Astragon.

Courts she ne'er saw; yet courts could have outdone,
With untaught looks, and an unpractis'd heart.

1 Butler loses no opportunity of rallying Sir William Davenant, and burlesquing his poem entitled Gondibert. Sir William, like many professional men, was much attached to his own line of science; and in his preface to Gondibert, endeavours to shew, that neither divines, leaders of armies, statesmen, nor ministers of the law, could uphold the government without the aid of poetry.

2 The vulgar imagine that every thing which they see in print must be true. An instance of this is related by our countryman Mr. Martin, who was thrown into the inquisition for neglecting to pay due respect to a religious procession at Malaga; One of the father-inquisitors took much pains to convert him; and among other abuses which he cast on the reformed religion and its professors, affirmed that king William was an atheist, and never received the sacrament. Mr. Martin assured him this was false to his own knowledge: when the reverend father replied, "Isaac, Isaac, never tell me so.— I have read it in a French book."

3 An equivoque upon the word upright. Perhaps our poet might here mean to satirize Colonel Hewson, who was a cobler, great preacher, and a commander of some note: "renown'd in song," for there are many ballads and poems which celebrate the cobler and his stall.

4 Repaired the heels, and mended the worn-out parts of the shoe.
Ill has he read, that never hit
On him in muses' deathless writ.¹
He had a weapon keen and fierce,
That thro' a bull-hide shield would pierce,²
And cut it in a thousand pieces,
Tho' tougher than the Knight of Greece his,³
With whom his black-thumb'd ancestor ⁴
Was comrade in the ten years' war:
For when the restless Greeks sat down
So many years before Troy town,
And were renown'd, as Homer writes,
For well-sol'd boots no less than fights,⁵
They ow'd that glory only to
His ancestor, that made them so.
Fast friend he was to reformation,
Until 'twas worn quite out of fashion;
Next rectifier of wry law,
And would make three to cure one flaw.
Learned he was, and could take note,
Transcribe, collect, translate, and quote:
But preaching was his chiefest talent,
Or argument, in which being valiant,
He us'd to lay about, and stickle,
Like ram or bull at conventicle:

¹ A parody upon the lines in Gondibert:
   Recorded Rhodalind, whose name in verse
   Who hath not hit, not luckily hath read.
Or thus:
   Recorded Rhodalind, whose high renown
   Who miss in books, not luckily have read.
² Meaning his sharp knife, with which he cuts the leather.
³ The shield of Ajax.
   Ἀίας ἐν γγύθεν ἡλθε, φίρων σάκος ἑτε πύργον,
   Χάλκεον, ἐπταθέον, ὅ οῖ Τυχίος κάμε τεῦχων.
   Iliad. vii. 219.
⁴ According to the old verses:
   The higher the plumb-tree, the riper the plumb;
   The richer the cober, the blacker his thumb.
⁵ 'Ἐκκυμίδες Αχαιοὶ — κνημῆς, was an armour for the legs, from κνύμη, tibia, crus, which Butler ludicrously calls boots.
For disputants, like rams and bulls,
Do fight with arms that spring from sculls.

Last Colon came, bold man of war,
Destin’d to blows by fatal star;
Right expert in command of horse,
But cruel, and without remorse.
That which of Centaur long ago
Was said, and has been wrested to
Some other knights, was true of this:
He and his horse were of a piece:
One spirit did inform them both,
The self-same vigour, fury, wroth;
Yet he was much the rougher part,
And always had the harder heart,
Altho’ his horse had been of those
That fed on man’s flesh, as fame goes:
Strange food for horse! and yet, alas!
It may be true, for flesh is grass.

1 Colon is said, by Sir Robert L’Estrange, to be one Ned Perry, an ostler; possibly he had risen to some command in a regiment of horse.
2 The horses of Diomedes were said to have been fed with human flesh.

Non tibi succurrit crudi Diomedis imago,
Efferus humanâ qui dape pavit equas.
Ovid. Epist. Deianira Herculi.

The moral, perhaps, might be, that Diomed was ruined by keeping his horses, as Actœon was said to be devoured by his dogs, because he was ruined by keeping them: a good hint to young men, qui gaudent equis, canibusque; the French say, of a man who has ruined himself by extravagance, il a mangé ses biens.

See the account of Duncan’s horses in Shakespeare. (Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 4.)

3 Our poet takes a particular pleasure in bantering Sir Thomas Browne, author of the Vulgar Errors, and Religio Medici. In the latter of these tracts he had said, "All flesh is grass, not only metaphorically, but literally: for all those creatures we behold are but the herbs of the field digested into flesh in them, or more remotely carnified in ourselves. Nay, farther we are, what we all abhor, anthropophagi and canibals; devourers not only of men but of ourselves, and that not in allegory but positive truth; for all this mass of flesh which we behold came in at our mouth; this frame we look upon hath been upon our trenchers."
Sturdy he was, and no less able
Than Hercules to cleanse a stable;¹
As great a drover, and as great
A critic too, in hog or neat.
He ripp'd the womb up of his mother,
Dame Tellus,² 'cause she wanted fother,
And provender, wherewith to feed
Himself and his less cruel steed.
It was a question whether he
Or's horse, were of a family
More worshipful; 'till antiquaries,
After th'ad almost por'd out their eyes,
Did very learnedly decide
The bus'ness on the horse's side,
And prov'd not only horse, but cows,
Nay pigs, were of the elder house:
For beasts, when man was but a piece
Of earth himself, did th' earth possess.
These worthies were the chief that led
The combatants ³ each in the head
Of his command, with arms and rage
Ready and longing to engage.
The num'rous rabble was drawn out
Of sev'ral countries round about,
From villages remote, and shires,
Of east and western hemispheres.
From foreign parishes and regions,
Of different manners, speech, religions,⁴

¹ Alluding to the fabulous story of Hercules, who cleansed the stables of Augeas, king of Elis, by turning the river Alpheus through them.
² This means no more than his ploughing the ground. The mock epic delights in exaggerating the most trifling circumstances. This whole character is full of wit and happy allusions.
³ All Butler's heroes are round-heads: the cavaliers are seldom mentioned in his poem. The reason may be, that his satire on the two predominant sects would not have had the same force from the mouth of a royalist. It is now founded on the acknowledgments and mutual recriminations of the parties exposed.
⁴ In a thanksgiving sermon preached before the parliament on the
CAME MEN AND MASTIFFS; SOME TO FIGHT FOR FAME AND HONOUR, SOME FOR SIGHT.
AND NOW THE FIELD OF DEATH, THE LISTS,
WERE ENTER'D BY ANTAGONISTS,
AND BLOOD WAS READY TO BE BROACH'D,
WHEN HUDIBRAS IN HASTE APPROACH'D, WITH SQUIRE AND WEAPONS TO ATTACK 'EM;
BUT FIRST THUS FROM HIS HORSE BESPAKE 'EM:

WHAT RAGE, O CITIZENS! WHAT FURY
DOETH YOU TO THESE DIRE ACTIONS HURRY?
WHAT OESTRUM, WHAT PHRENETIC MOOD?
MAKES YOU THUSlavish OF YOUR BLOOD,
WHILE THE PROUD VIES YOUR TROPHIES BOAST,
AND, UNREVENG'D WALKS, ——-GHOST?
WHAT TOWNS, WHAT GARRISONS MIGHT YOU,
WITH HAZARD OF THIS BLOOD, SUBDUE,

TAKING OF CHESTER, THE PREACHER SAID, THERE WERE IN LONDON NO LESS THAN ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY DIFFERENT SECTS.

1 BUTLER CERTAINLY HAD THESE LINES OF LUCAN IN VIEW. PHARSAL. 1—8.
QUIS FUROR, O CIVES, QUÆ TANTA LICENTIA FERRI, GENTIBUS INVISIS LATIUM PRAEBERE CRUOREM?
CUNQUE SUPERBA FORET BABYLON SPOILIANDA TROPHÆIS
AUSONII, UMBRÆQUE ERRARET CRASSUS INULTÀ, BELIA GERI PLACUIT NULLOS HABITURA TRIUMPHOS?
HEU, QUANTUM POTUIT TERRÆ PELAGIQUE PARARI
HOC, QUÆM CIVILES HAUSERUNT, SANGUINE, DEXTRÆ.

AND VIRGIL, ÆN. II. 42.
——O MISERI, QUÆ TANTA INSANIA, CIVES?
PERHAPS TOO HE RECOLLECTED THE SEVENTH EPODE OF HORACE.
QUO, QUO SCELESTI, RUITIS? AUT CUR DEXTERIS
APTANTUR ENSES CONDI?

2 Οἰχεός IS NOT ONLY A GREEK WORD FOR MADNESS, BUT SIGNIFIES ALSO A GAD-BEE OR HORSE-FLY, THAT TORMENTS CATTLE IN THE SUMMER, AND MAKES THEM RUN ABOUT AS IF THEY WERE MAD.

3 VIES, OR DEVIZES, IN WILTSHIRE. THIS PASSAGE ALLUDES TO THE DEFEAT GIVEN BY WILMOT TO THE FORCES UNDER SIR WILLIAM WALLER, NEAR THAT PLACE, JULY 13, 1643. AFTER THE BATTLE SIR WILLIAM WAS ENTIRELY NEGLECTED BY HIS PARTY. CLARENDON CALLS IT THE BATTLE OF ROUNDWAY-DOWN. SEE VOL. II. P. 224. SOME IN JOKE CALL IT RUNAWAY-DOWN. OTHERS SUPPOSE THE HIATUS, IN THE SECOND LINE, OUGHT TO BE SUPPLIED BY THE NAME HAMPDEN, WHO WAS KILLED IN CHALGROVE FIELD IN OXFORDSHIRE, ABOUT THE TIME OF WALLER'S DEFEAT, IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF THE DEVIZES.—THE GHOSTS OF THE SLAIN COULD NOT ENTER ELYSIUM, TILL THEIR DEATHS WERE REVENGED; UM-BRÆQUE ERRARET CRASSUS INULTÀ.
Which now y'are bent to throw away
In vain, untriumphable fray?¹
Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow
Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow?²
The cause, for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er?
Then because quarrels still are seen
With oaths and swearings to begin
The solemn league and covenant³
Will seem a mere God-damn-me rant,
And we that took it, and have fought,
As lewd as drunkards that fall out:
For as we make war for the king
Against himself,⁴ the self same thing
Some will not stick to swear we do
For God, and for religion too;
For if bear-baiting we allow,
What good can reformation do?⁵
The blood and treasure that's laid out
Is thrown away, and goes for nought.

¹ The Romans never granted a triumph to the conqueror in a civil war.
² The support of the discipline, or ecclesiastical regimen by presbyters was called The Cause, as if no other cause were comparable to it. See Hooker's Eccles. Pol. preface.
³ Mr. Robert Gordon, in his History of the illustrious family of Gordon, vol ii. p. 197. compares the solemn league and covenant with the holy league in France: he says they were as like as one egg to another, the one was nursed by the Jesuits, the other by the Scots presbyterians.
⁴ "To secure the king's person from danger," says Lord Clarendon, "was an expression they were not ashamed always to use, when there was no danger that threatened, but what themselves contrived and designed against him. They not only declared that they fought for the king, but that the raising and maintaining soldiers for their own army, would be an acceptable service for the king, parliament, and kingdom."

One Blake, in the king's army, gave intelligence to the enemy in what part of the army the king fought, that they might direct their bullets accordingly.
⁵ Hewson is said, by Mr. Hume, to have gone, in the fervor of his zeal against bear-baiting, and killed all the bears which he could find in the city. But we are told by the author of the Mystery of the good old Cause, a pamphlet published soon after these animals were destroyed,
Canto II.

HUDIBRAS.

Are these the fruits o' th' protestation, ¹
The prototype of reformation,²
Which all the saints, and some, since martyrs,³
Wore in their hats like wedding-garters,⁴
When 'twas resolved by their house,
Six members' quarrel to espouse?:⁵
Did they for this draw down the rabble,
With zeal, and noises formidable;⁶
And make all cries about the town
Join throats to cry the bishops down? ⁵³⁰
Who having round begirt the palace,
As once a month they do the gallows,⁷
As members gave the sign about,
Set up their throats, with hideous shout.

that they were killed by Colonel Pride. Granger's Biographical History, vol. iii. p. 75
¹ The protestation was framed, and taken in the house of commons, May 3, 1641; and immediately printed, and dispersed over the nation. The design of it was to alarm the people with fears and apprehensions both for their civil and religious liberties; as if the protestant religion were in danger, and the privileges of parliament trampled upon. The king was deemed to have acted unconstitutionally the day before, by taking notice of the bill of attainder against the earl of Strafford, then depending in the house of lords.
² The protestation was the first attempt towards a national combination against the establishment, and was harbingers to the covenant. See Nelson's Collections, vol. i. p. ult. and Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy, vol. i. 22—6.
³ Those that were killed in the war.
⁴ The protestors or petitioners, when they came tumultuously to the parliament-house, Dec. 27, 1641, stuck pieces of paper in their hats, which were to pass for their protestation.
⁵ Charles I. ordered the following members, lord Kimbolton, Mr. Pym, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Hampden, Sir Arthur Haskig, and Mr. Stroud, to be prosecuted, for plotting with the Scots, and stirring up sedition. The commons voted against their arrest, and the king went to the house with his guards, in order to seize them; but they had received intelligence of the design, and made their escape. This was one of the first acts of open violence which preceded the civil wars. The king took this measure chiefly by the advice of Lord Digby.
⁶ The cry of the rabble was, as mentioned in the following lines, for reformation in church and state—no bishops—no evil counsellors, &c. See the protestation in Rapin's History.
⁷ The executions at Tyburn were generally once a month.

Vol. 1.
When tinkers bawl'd aloud, to settle Church-discipline, for patching kettle.¹
No sow-gelder did blow his horn
To geld a cat, but cry'd Reform.
The oyster-women lock'd their fish up,
And trudg'd away to cry No Bishop:
The mouse-trap men laid save-alls by,
And 'gainst ev'il counsellors did cry.
Botchers left old cloaths in the lurch,
And fell to turn and patch the church.
Some cry'd the covenant, instead
Of pudding-pies and ginger-bread:
And some for brooms, old boots, and shoes,
Bawl'd out to purge the commons' house:
Instead of kitchen-stuff, some cry
A gospel-preaching-ministry:
And some for old suits, coats, or cloak,
No surplices, nor service-book.
A strange harmonious inclination
Of all degrees to reformation:
And is this all? is this the end
To which these carr'ings-on did tend?
Hath public faith, like a young heir,
For this tak'n up all sorts of ware,
And run int' ev'ry tradesman's book,
'Till both turn bankrupts, and are broke;
Did saints for this bring in their plate,²
And crowd, as if they came too late?
For when they thought the Cause had need on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't.

¹ For, that is, instead of; as also in v. 547 and 551.
² Zealous persons, on both sides, lent their plate, to raise money for recruiting the army. The king, or some one for the parliament, gave notes of hand to repay with interest. Several colleges at Oxford have notes to this day, for their plate delivered to the king: and I have seen many other notes of the same nature. Even the poor women brought a spoon, a thimble, or a bodkin.
Did they coin piss-pots, bowls, and flaggons, 565
Int' officers of horse and dragoons;
And into pikes and musqueteers
Stamp beakers, cups, and porringer's?
A thimble, bodkin, and a spoon,
Did start up living men, as soon 570
As in the furnace they were thrown,
Just like the dragon's teeth b'ing sown.¹
Then was the cause all gold and plate,
The brethren's off' rings, consecrate,
Like th' Hebrew calf, and down before it 575
The saints fell prostrate, to adore it.²
So say the wicked — and will you
Make that sarcastous scandal true,³
By running after dogs and bears,
Beasts more unclean than calves or steers? 580
Have pow'rful preachers ply'd their tongues,⁴
And laid themselves out, and their lungs;
Us'd all means, both direct and sinister,
I' th' power of gospel-preaching minister?
Have they invented tones, to win 585
The women, and make them draw in
The men, as Indians with a female
Tame elephant inveigle the male?⁵
Have they told prov'dence what it must do,
Whom to avoid, and whom to trust to? 590
Discover'd th' enemy's design,
And which way best to countermine;

¹ Ovid. Metamorph. lib. iii. 106.
² Exod. xxxii.
³ Sarcasmus is here converted into an adjective.
⁴ Calamy, Case, and the other dissenting teachers, exhorted their flocks, in the most moving terms and tones, to contribute their money towards the support of the parliament army.
⁵ The method by which elephants are caught, is by placing a tame female elephant within an inclosure, who, like a decoy-duck, draws in the male.
Prescrib'd what ways he hath to work,
Or it will ne'er advance the kirk;
Told it the news o' th' last express,¹
And after good or bad success
Made prayers, not so like petitions,
As overtures and propositions,
Such as the army did present
To their creator, the parliament;
In which they freely will confess,
They will not, cannot acquiesce,
Unless the work be carry'd on
In the same way they have begun,
By setting church and common-weal
All on a flame, bright as their zeal,
On which the saints were all a-gog,
And all this for a bear and dog.
The parliament drew up petitions²
To 'tself, and sent them, like commissions,

¹ The prayers of the presbyterians, in those days, were very historical. Mr. G. Swaithe, in his Prayers, p. 12, says, "I hear the king hath set up his standard at York, against the parliament and the city of London. Look thou upon them; take their cause into thine own hand, appear thou in the cause of thy saints; the cause in hand."
² It was customary for the active members of parliament to draw up petitions, and send them into the country to be signed. Lord Clarendon charges them with altering the matter of the petition after it was signed and affixing a fresh petition to the names. The Hertfordshire
To well-affected persons down,
In every city and great town,
With pow'r to levy horse and men,
Only to bring them back again;
For this did many, many a mile,
Ride manfully in rank and file,
With papers in their hats, that show'd
As if they to the pillory rode.
Have all these courses, these efforts,
Been try'd by people of all sorts,
Velis et remis, omnibus nervis,¹
And all t' advance the cause's service:
And shall all now be thrown away
In petulant intestine fray?
Shall we, that in the cov'nant swore,
Each man of us to run before
Another² still in reformation,
Give dogs and bears a dispensation?
How will dissenting brethren relish it?
What will malignants³ say? videlicet,
That each man swore to do his best,
To damn and perjure all the rest;
And bid the devil take the hinmost,
Which at this race is like to win most.

petition, at the beginning of the war, took notice of things done in parliament the night before its delivery: it was signed by many thousands. Another petition was presented, beginning, "We men, women, children, " and servants, having considered," &c. Fifteen thousand porters petitioned against the bishops, affirming they cannot endure the weight of episcopacy any longer.

¹ That is, with all their might. The reader will remember, that to our hero

² This was a common phrase in those days, particularly with the zealous preachers, and is inserted in the solemn league and covenant.

³ That is, the king's party; the parliament calling their opponents by that name.
They'll say, our bus'ness to reform
The church and state is but a worm;
For to subscribe, unsight, unseen,
T' an unknown church's discipline,
What is it else, but, before hand,
T' engage, and after understand?
For when we swore to carry on
The present reformation,
According to the purest mode
Of churches, best reform'd abroad,
What did we else but make a vow
To do, we knew not what, nor how?
For no three of us will agree
Where, or what churches these should be.
And is indeed the self-same case
With theirs that swore et cæteras;
Or the French league, in which men vow'd
To fight to the last drop of blood.¹
These slanders will be thrown upon
The cause and work we carry on,
If we permit men to run headlong
T' exorbitances fit for Bedlam,
Rather than gospel-walking times²
When slightest sins are greatest crimes.
But we the matter so shall handle,
As to remove that odious scandal.
In name of king and parliament,³
I charge ye all, no more foment
'This feud, but keep the peace between
Your brethren and your countrymen;
And to those places straight repair
Where your respective dwellings are:
But to that purpose first surrender
'The fiddler, as the prime offender,⁴
'Th' incendiary vile, that is chief
Author, and engineer of mischief;
That makes division between friends,
For prophane and malignant ends.

For 'tis, to speak in a familiar stile,
A Yorkshire wea-bit longer than a mile.
Mr. Butler here shews his impartiality, by bantering the faults of his own party.
¹ The holy league in France, 1576, was the original of the Scotch solemn league and covenant: they are often compared together by Sir William Dugdale and others. See Satire Menippée, sometimes called the French Hudibras.
² This is one of the cant phrases much used in our author's time.
³ The presbyterians made a distinction between the king's person politic, and his person natural: when they fought against the latter, it was in defence of the former, always inseparable from the parliament. The commission granted to the earl of Essex was in the name of the king and parliament. But when the independents got the upper hand, the name of the king was omitted, and the commission of Sir Thomas Fairfax ran only in the name of the parliament.
⁴ See the fable of the trumpeter, who was put to death for setting people together by the ears without fighting himself. It burlesques the clamours made by the parliament against evil counsellors; to which clamours were sacrificed Lord Strafford, archbishop Laud, and others.
He and that engine of vile noise,
On which illegally he plays,
Shall, dictum factum, both be brought
To condign punish' ment, as they ought.
This must be done, and I would fain see
Mortal so sturdily as to gain-say:
For then I'll take another course,
And soon reduce you all by force.
This said, he clapt his hand on's sword,
To shew he meant to keep his word.

But Talgol, who had long suppress Inflamed wrath in glowing breast,¹
Which now began to rage and burn as Implacably as flame in furnace,
Thus answer'd him; Thou vermin wretched,²
As e'er in measled pork was hatched;³
Thou tail of worship, that dost grow
On rump of justice as of cow;
How dar'st thou with that sullen luggage
O' thyself, old ir'n⁴ and other baggage,
With which thy steed of bone and leather
Has broke his wind in halting hither;
How durst th', I say, adventure thus
T' oppose thy lumber against us?

---
¹ Æstuat ingens
Imo in corde pudor, mixtoque insania luctu,
Et furiis agitatus amor, et conscientia virtus.
_Eneid._ x. 870.

The speech, though coarse, and becoming the mouth of a butcher, is an excellent satire upon the justices of the peace in those days, who were often shoemakers, tailors, or common livery servants. Instead of making peace with their neighbours, they hunted impertinently for trilling oiffences, and severely punished them.

² Homer's language is almost as coarse in the following line:
_Oinobaris, evnóς ὀμματ' ἓχων, κραδίην δ' ἔλαφων._
II. 1. 225.

³ Unhealthy pigs are subject to an eruption, like the measles, which breeds maggots, or vermin.

⁴ Meaning his sword and pistols.
Could thine impertinence find out
No work t'employ itself about,
Where thou secure from wooden blow,
Thy busy vanity might show?
Was no dispute afoot between
The caterwauling bretheren?
No subtle question rais'd among
Those out-o'-their wits, and those i' th' wrong?
No prize between those combatants
O' th' times, the land and water saints;¹
Where thou might'st stickle without hazard
Of outrage, to thy hide and mazzard,²
And, not for want of bus'ness, come
To us to be thus troublesome,
To interrupt our better sort
Of disputants, and spoil our sport?
Was there no felony, no bawd,
Cut-purse,³ nor burglary abroad?

¹ That is, the presbyterians and anabaptists.
² Face, perhaps from the Latin maxilla; and the French, machoire.
³ More probably from mazer, a cup, from the Dutch maeser, a knot of maple:
   A mazer ywrought of the maple ware.

That the name of the cup should be transferred to the toper seems not at all inconsistent with the etymology of burlesque words; the northern custom of drinking out of the skull of an enemy, and the southern fashion of adorning cups with grotesque heads, lend a probability to this derivation which is somewhat helped by the words of Minshew, sub voce mazer;—"enim pocula plerunque sunt acerna, facta extornatis " hujus ligni radicibus, quæ propter multicolores venas, maculasque " variegatas aspectu jucunda sunt et mensis gratissima." Mazer is used for a head, seriously, by Sylvester; and ludicrously in two old plays. Mazer becomes mazzard, as visor became vizard.

Archdeacon Nares very justly observes that the derivation from maochoire, a jaw, is contradicted by Shakspeare;—

Hum. This (skull) might be my lord such-a-one . . . . Why e'en so: and now my lady Worm's; chapless, and knock'd about the mazzard with a sexton's spade.]

³ Men formerly hung their purses, by a silken or leathern strap, to their belts, on the outside of their garments, as ladies now wear watches. See the figures on old monuments. Hence the miscreant, whom we now denominate a pickpocket, was then properly a cutpurse.
No stolen pig, nor plunder'd goose,
To tie thee up from breaking loose?
No ale unlicens'd, broken hedge,
For which thou statute might'st alledge,
To keep thee busy from foul evil,
And shame due to thee from the devil?
Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journey-work for thee;
And set th' a task with subornation,
To stitch up sale and sequestration;
To cheat, with holiness and zeal,
All parties and the common-weal?
Much better had it been for thee,
H' had kept thee where th' art us'd to be;
Or sent th' on business any whither,
So he had never brought thee hither.
But if th' hast brain enough in skull
To keep within his lodging whole,
And not provoke the rage of stones,
And cudgels, to thy hide and bones;
Tremble and vanish while thou may'st,
Which I'll not promise if thou stay'st.

At this the Knight grew high in wroth,
And lifting hands and eyes up both,
Three times he smote on stomach stout,
From whence, at length, these words broke out:

Was I from this entit'led Sir,
And girt with trusty sword and spur,
For fame and honour to wage battle,
Thus to be brav'd by foe to cattle?

---

1 In many counties certain persons appointed by the parliament to promote their interest, had power to raise money for their use, and to punish their opponents by fine and imprisonment; these persons so associated were called a committee. Walker's Sufferings of the Episcopal Clergy. Part i.

2 Sir Samuel Luke was scout-master, in the parliament-army, hence the poet supposes Hudibras might be sent on errands by the devil.
Not all the pride that makes thee swell
As big as thou dost blown-up veal;
Nor all thy tricks and slight to cheat,
And sell thy carrion for good meat;
Not all thy magic to repair
Decay'd old age, in tough lean ware,
Make nat'ral death appear thy work,
And stop the gangrene in stale pork;
Not all that force that makes thee proud,
Because by bullock ne'er withstood:
Thou' arm'd with all thy cleavers, knives,
And axes made to hew down lives,
Shall save, or help thee to evade
The hand of justice, or this blade,
Which I, her sword-bearer, do carry,
For civil deed and military.
Nor shall these words of venom base,
Which thou hast from their native place,
Thy stomach, pump'd to fling on me,
Go unreveng'd, though I am free.²
Thou down the same throat shalt devour 'em
Like tainted beef, and pay dear for 'em.
Nor shall it e'er be said, that wight
With gantlet blue and bases white,³

¹ Οὐκ ἄν τοι χραίσμη κίθαρις, τά τε ἔδωρ Ἀφροδίτης,
  Ἑν τε κόμη, τό, τε εἴδος, ὦτ' ἐν κονιρσί μυγείς.
Homer. Iliad. iii. 54.
Nequicquam, Veneris præsidio ferox,
Pectes caesariem : grataque feminis
Imbelli citharâ carmina divides :
  Nequicquam thalamo graves
Hastas, et calami apicula Cnossii
Vitabis, strepitumque et celerem sequi
Ajacem. Tamen, heu, serus adulteros
Crines pulvere collines.
Hor. Carm. lib. i. 15.
² Free, that is, untouched by your accusations, as being free from what you charge me with.
³ Meaning his blue cuffs, and white apron. Gauntlet was iron armour which warriors wore on their hands, and lower part of their arms.
[Bases, a mantle which hung from the middle to about the knees or lower,
And round blunt truncheon by his side,¹
So great a man at arms defy'd,
With words far bitterer than wormwood,
That would in Job or Grizel stir mood.²
Dogs with their tongues their wounds do heal;
But men with hands, as thou shalt feel.

This said, with hasty rage he snatch'd
His gun-shot, that in holsters watch'd;
And bending cock, he tell'd full
Against th' outside of Talgoł's skull;
Vowing that he should ne'er stir further,
Nor henceforth cow or bullock murth. ⁷⁸⁰
But Pallas came in shape of rust,
And 'twixt the spring and hammer thrust
Her gorgon-shield, which made the cock ⁴
Stand stiff, as if 'twere turn'd t' a stock.

¹ worn by knights on horseback.] His apron reached the ground, and is therefore called bases.
² That is, the steel on which a butcher whets his knife. In some editions it is dudgeon, that is, a short weapon.
³ The patience of the former is well known: that of the latter is celebrated in Chaucer and several old writers. Chaucer, vol. ii. the Clerk’s Tale, ed. Tyrwhitt, 8vo. The story is taken from Petrarch, for Chaucer says,
⁴ As was Grisilde, therefore Petrark writeth
This storie, which with high stile he enditeth.

The tract is entitled, De obedientià et fides uxorià mythologia. Its principal circumstances are these—Walter, marquis of Salucces, in Lower Lombardy, had a mind to make trial of his wife's patience and obedience. He first sent some ruffians to take away her son and daughter, apparently with intent to murder them: then clothed her in the mean apparel which she had formerly worn; for she was a person of low birth; sent her home to her father's cottage; pretended that his subjects were displeased at his unequal match, and that he had obtained a dispensation from the pope to marry another woman of equal rank with himself. All this, patient Grizel bore with great resignation and good humour; till at last the marquis disclosed the artifice, and proved thenceforth a kind and affectionate husband.—Chaucer again observes,
That wedded men ne connen no measure
When that they find a patient creature.

³ A banter upon Homer, Virgil, and other epic poets, who have always a deity at hand to protect their heroes.
⁴ In some editions the next lines are printed thus,
   —which made the cock
   Stand stiff, as 'twere transform'd to stock.
Mean while fierce Talgol gath'ring might,
With rugged truncheon charg'd the Knight;
And he his rusty pistol held,
To take the blow on, like a shield;
The gun recoil'd, as well it might,
Not us'd to such a kind of fight.
And shrunk from its great master's gripe,
Knock'd down, and stunn'd, with mortal stripe:
Then Hudibras, with furious haste,
Drew out his sword; yet not so fast,
But Talgol first, with hardy thwack,
Twice bruis'd his head, and twice his back;
But when his nut-brown sword was out,
Courageously he laid about,
Imprinting many a wound upon
His mortal foe, the truncheon.
The trusty cudgel did oppose
Itself against dead-doing blows,
To guard its leader from fell bane,
And then reveng'd itself again:
And though the sword, some understood,
In force, had much the odds of wood;
'Twas nothing so, both side were balanc't
So equal, none knew which was valiant'st.
For wood with honour b'ing engag'd,
Is so implacably enrag'd,
Though iron hew and mangle sore,
Wood wounds and bruises honour more.
And now both knights were out of breath,
Tir'd in the hot pursuit of death;

Meanwhile fierce Talgol, gath'er'ing might,
With rugged truncheon charg'd the knight,
But he, with petronel upheav'd,
Instead of shield, the blow receiv'd.
Petronel is a horseman's gun, but here it must signify a pistol, as it doth not appear that Hudibras carried a carbine.

VOL. I.
Whilst all the rest, amaz'd, stood still,
Expecting which should take, or kill.
This Hudibras observ'd, and fretting
Conquest should be so long a getting,
He drew up all his force into
One body, and that into one blow.
But Talgol wisely avoided it
By cunning slight; for had it hit
The upper part of him, the blow
Had slit, as sure as that below.

Mean while th' incomparable Colon.
To aid his friend, began to fall on;
Him Ralph encounter'd, and straight grew
A dismal combat 'twixt them two:
Th' one arm'd with metal, th' other with wood;
This fit for bruise, and that for blood.

With many a stiff thwack, many a bang,
Hard crab-tree, and old iron rang;
While none that saw them could divine
To which side conquest would incline,
Until Magnano, who did envy
That two should with so many men vie,
By subtle stratagem of brain
Perform'd what force could ne'er attain,
For he, by foul hap, having found
Where thistles grew on barren ground,
In haste he drew his weapon out,
And having cropp'd them from the root,
He clapp'd them under th' horse's tail,
With prickles sharper than a nail.

1 Take, that is, take prisoner, as in verse 905, But took none.
2 In some editions, A fierce dispute between them two.
3 In some editions we read — th' other wood.
4 Here the sound is an echo to the sense.
5 The same trick was played upon Don Quixote's Rosinante and Sancho's dapple. P. ii. lib. viii. c. 61 ed. Granville.
The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if 't had been beside his sense,
Striving to disengage from smart
And raging pain, th' afflicted part;
Instead of which he threw the pack
Of Squire and baggage from his back;
And blund'ring still with smarting rump,
He gave the champion's steed a thump
That stagger'd him. The Knight did stoop,
And sat on further side aslope.
This Talgol viewing, who had now,
By flight, escap'd the fatal blow,
He rally'd, and again fell to't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length,
And dash'd his brains, if any, out:
But Mars, who still protects the stout,
In pudding-time came to his aid,
And under him the bear convey'd;
The bear, upon whose soft fur-gown
The Knight, with all his weight, fell down.
The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong Knight, from bruise or wound:
Like feather-bed betwixt a wall,
And heavy brunt of cannon ball
As Sancho on a blanket fell,¹
And had no hurt; ours far'd as well
In body, though his mighty spirit,
B'ing heavy, did not so well bear it.
The bear was in a greater fright,
Beat down, and worsted by the Knight:

¹ Sancho's adventure at the inn, being toss'd in a blanket.
He roar’d, and rag’d, and flung about,
To shake off bondage from his snout. 880
His wrath inflam’d boil’d o’er, and from
His jaws of death, he threw the foam;
Fury in stranger postures threw him,
And more than ever herald drew him.
He tore the earth, which he had sav’d
From squelch of Knight, and storm’d and rav’d;
And vex’d the more, because the harms
He felt were ’gainst the law of arms;
For men he always took to be
His friends, and dogs the enemy,
Who never so much hurt had done him
As his own side did falling on him.
It griev’d him to the guts, that they,
For whom h’ had fought so many a fray,
And serv’d with loss of blood so long,
Should offer such inhuman wrong;
Wrong of unsoldier-like condition;
For which he flung down his commission, 1
And laid about him, till his nose
From thrall of ring and cord broke loose.
Soon as he felt himself enlarg’d,
Through thickest of his foes he charg’d,
And made way through th’ amazed crew,
Some he o’er ran, and some o’erthrew,
But took none; for, by hasty flight,
He strove t’avoid the conquering Knight,
From whom he fled with as much haste
And dread, as he the rabble chac’d.

1 Bishop Warburton remarks on this line, that, during the civil wars, it was the usual way for those of either party, at a distressful juncture, to come to the king or parliament with some unreasonable demands; and if they were not complied with, to throw up their commissions, and go over to the opposite side: pretending, that they could not in honour
In haste he fled, and so did they,
Each and his fear a several way.
Crowdero only kept the field,
Not stirring from the place he held,
Though beaten down, and wounded sore,
I’ th’ fiddle, and a leg that bore
One side of him, not that of bone,
But much its better, th’ wooden one.
He spying Hudibras lie strow’d
Upon the ground, like log of wood,
With fright of fall, supposed wound,
And loss of urine, in a swound;
In haste he snatch’d the wooden limb,
That hurt in th’ ankle lay by him,
And fitting it for sudden fight,
Straight drew it up, t’ attack the Knight,
For getting up on stump and huckle,
He with the foe began to buckle,
Vowing to be reveng’d for breach
Of crowd and shin upon the wretch,
Sole author of all detriment
He and his fiddle underwent.
But Ralpho, who had now begun
T’ adventure resurrection
From heavy squelch, and had got up
Upon his legs with sprained crup,
Looking about beheld the bard
To charge the Knight entranc’d prepar’d,
He snatch’d his whiniard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed,
As rats do from a falling house,
To hide itself from rage of blows;
And wing'd with speed and fury, flew
To rescue Knight from black and blue.
Which ere he could atchieve, his scone
The leg encounter'd twice and once;¹
And now 'twas rais'd, to smite agen,
When Ralpho thrust himself between;
He took the blow upon his arm,
To shield the Knight from further harm;
And joining wrath with force, bestow'd
O' th' wooden member such a load,
That down it fell, and with it bore
Crowdero, whom it prop'd before.
To him the Squire right nimbly run,
And setting his bold foot upon
His trunk, thus spoke: What desp'rate frenzy ⁹⁵⁵
Made thee, thou whelp of sin, to fancy
Thyself, and all that coward rabble,
T' encounter us in battle able?
How durst th', I say, oppose thy curship
'Gainst arms, authority, and worship,
And Hudibras, or me provoke,
Though all thy limbs were heart of oak,²
And th' other half of thee as good
To bear out blows as that of wood?
Could not the whipping-post prevail
With all its rhet'ric, nor the jail,
To keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin?

¹ Thus Justice Silence, in Henry IV. Act v. "Who I? I have been " merry twice and once ere now." And the witch in Macbeth, Act v.
" Twice and once the hedge pig whin'd."
² Thus Hector braves Achilles.
Τοῦ δ' ἔγγω ἄντιος εἶμι, καὶ εἰ πυρὶ χαῖρας έωκεν,
Εἴ πυρὶ χαῖρας έωκε, μένος δ' αἰθώμα σιέμης.
Which now thou shalt—but first our care
Must see how Hudibras doth fare.
This said, he gently rais'd the Knight,
And set him on his bum upright:
To rouze him from lethargic dump,
He tweak'd his nose, with gentle thump
Knock'd on his breast, as if't had been
To raise the spirits lodg'd within.
They, waken'd with the noise, did fly
From inward room, to window eye,
And gently op'ning lid, the casement,
Look'd out, but yet with some amazement.
This gladded Ralpho much to see,
Who thus bespoke the Knight: quoth he,
Tweaking his nose, You are, great Sir,
A self-denying conqueror;
As high, victorious, and great,
As e'er fought for the Churches yet,
If you will give yourself but leave
To make out what y' already have;
That's victory. The foe, for dread
Of your nine-worthiness, is fled,
All, save Crowdero, for whose sake
You did th' espous'd cause undertake;
And he lies pris'ner at your feet,
To be dispos'd as you think meet,

1 Imitating Virgil's Quos ego—sed motos, &c.
2 Compare this with the situation of Hector, who was stunned by a severe blow received from Ajax, and comforted by Apollo.—Iliad xv. v. 240.
3 Ridiculing the self-denying ordinance, by which the members of both houses were obliged to quit their employments, both civil and military; notwithstanding which Sir Samuel Luke was continued governor of Newport Pagnel for some time.
4 Thrice worthy is a common appellation in romances; but, in the opinion of the squire, would have been a title not equivalent to the knight's desert. See the History of the Nine Worthies of the World; and Fresnoy on Romances.
Either for life, or death, or sale,
The gallows, or perpetual jail;
For one wink of your pow'rful eye
Must sentence him to live or die.
His fiddle is your proper purchase,
Won in the service of the Churches;
And by your doom must be allow'd
To be, or be no more, a Crowd:
For tho' success did not confer
Just title on the conqueror;¹
Tho' dispensations were not strong
Conclusions, whether right or wrong;
Altho' out-goings did confirm,²
And owning were but a mere term;
Yet as the wicked have no right
To th' creature, ³ tho' usurp'd by might,
The property is in the saint,
From whom th' injuriously detain't;
Of him they hold their luxuries,
Their dogs, their horses, whores, and dice,
Their riots, revels, masks, delights,
Pimps, buffoons, fiddlers, parasites;
All which the saints have title to,
And ought t' enjoy, if th' had their due.
What we take from them is no more
Than what was ours by right before;
For we are their true landlords still,
And they our tenants but at will.

At this the Knight began to rouse,
And by degrees grow valorous:
He star'd about, and seeing none
Of all his foes remain but one,

¹ Success was pleaded by the presbyterians as an evident proof of the justice of their cause.
² In some editions we read,—did not confirm.
³ It was a principle maintained by the independents of those days, that dominion was founded in grace; and, therefore, if a man were not a saint, or a godly man, he could have no right to any lands or chattels.
He snatch'd his weapon that lay near him,
And from the ground began to rear him,
Vowing to make Crowdero pay
For all the rest that ran away.
But Ralpbo now, in colder blood,
His fury mildly thus withstood:
Great Sir, quoth he, your mighty spirit
Is rais'd too high; this slave does merit
To be the hangman's bus'ness, sooner
Than from your hand to have the honour
Of his destruction; I that am
So much below in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcase,
Or ill entreat his fiddle or case:
Will you, great Sir, that glory blot
In cold blood, which you gain'd in hot?
Will you employ your conquering sword
To break a fiddle, and your word?
For tho' I fought and overcame,
And quarter gave, 'twas in your name:
For great commanders always own
What's prosp'rous by the soldier done.
To save, where you have pow'r to kill,
Argues your pow'r above your will;
And that your will and pow'r have less
Than both might have of selfishness,
This pow'r which now alive, with dread
He trembles at, if he were dead,
Would no more keep the slave in awe,
Than if you were a knight of straw;
For death would then be his conqueror,
Not you, and free him from that terror.
If danger from his life accrue,
Or honour from his death to you,
'Twere policy, and honour too,
To do as you resolv'd to do:
But, Sir, 'twou'd wrong your valour much,
To says it needs, or fears a crutch.
Great conqu'rors greater glory gain
By foes in triumph led, than slain:
The laurels that adorn their brows
Are pull'd from living, not dead boughs,
And living foes: the greatest fame
Of cripple slain can be but lame:
One half of him's already slain,¹
The other is not worth your pain;
Th' honour can but on one side light,
As worship did, when y'were dub'd Knight.²
Wherefore I think it better far
To keep him prisoner of war;
And let him fast in bonds abide,
At court of justice to be try'd:
Where, if h' appear so bold or crafty,
There may be danger in his safety;³
If any member there dislike
His face, or to his beard have pike;⁴
Or if his death will save, or yield
Revenge or fright, it is reveal'd;
Tho' he has quarter, ne'ertheless
Y' have pow'r to hang him when you please;

¹ This reminds me of the supplication of a lame musician in the Anthology, p. 5. ed. H. Steph.
² The honour of knighthood is conferred by the king's laying his sword upon the person's shoulder, and saying, "Arise, sir——"—Clarendon.
³ Cromwell's speech in the case of Lord Capel may serve to explain this line: he began with high encomiums of his merit, capacity, and honour; but when every one expected that he would have voted to save his life, he told them, that the question before them was, whether they would preserve the greatest and most dangerous enemy that the cause had? that he knew my lord Capel well, and knew him so firmly attached to the royal interest, that he would never desert it, or acquiesce under any establishment contrary to it.—Clarendon.
⁴ Doubtless, particular instances are here alluded to. It is notorious that the lords and others were condemned or pardoned, as their personal interest prevailed more or less in the house. A whimsical instance
This has been often done by some
Of our great conqu'rors, you know whom;
And has by most of us been held
Wise justice, and to some reveal'd:
For words and promises, that yoke
The conqueror, are quickly broke;
Like Sampson's cuffs, tho' by his own
Directions and advice put on.
For if we should fight for the cause
By rules of military laws,
And only do what they call just,
The cause would quickly fall to dust.
This we among ourselves may speak;
But to the wicked or the weak
We must be cautious to declare
Perfection-truths, such as these are.¹

This said, the high outrageous mettle
Of Knight began to cool and settle.

of mercy was the pardon indulged to Sir John Owen, a Welsh gentleman, who being tried, together with the lords Capel, Holland, Loughborough, and others; Ireton, rather to insult the nobility, than from any principle of compassion, observed that much endeavour had been used to preserve each of the lords, but here was a poor commoner, whom no one had spoke for; he therefore moved that he might be pardoned by the mere grace of the house. Sir John was a man of humorous intrepidity: when he, with the lords, was condemned to be beheaded, he made his judges a low bow, and gave his humble thanks; at which a bye-stander, surprised, asked him what he meant? To which the knight, with a broad oath replied, that, “it was a great honour to a poor gentleman of Wales to lose his head with such noble lords, for, in truth, he was afraid they would have hanged him.” See Clarendon, Rushworth, Whitelocke, and Pennant's Tour of Wales, in 1773, page 264. The parliament was charged with setting aside the articles of capitulation agreed to by its generals, and killing prisoners after quarter had been granted them, on pretence of a revelation that such an one ought to die. See also the case of the surrender of Pendennis castle.

¹ Truths revealed only to the perfect, or the initiated into the higher mysteries.

Φίλιξόμαι, οὶς φέμις ἵστυν, ἵκας, ἵκας ἵστε ἵκηλοι.

[¹ A line made up from Fragments of Orpheus and the Hymn to Apollo of Callimachus.]
He lik'd the Squire's advice, and soon
Resolv'd to see the bus'ness done;
And therefore charg'd him first to bind
Crowdero's hands on rump behind,
And to its former place, and use,
The wooden member to reduce;
But force it take an oath before,
Ne'er to bear arms against him more.\(^1\)

Ralpho dispatch'd with speedy haste,
And having ty'd Crowdero fast,
He gave Sir Knight the end of cord,
To lead the captive of his sword
In triumph, while the steeds he caught,
And them to further service brought.
The Squire, in state, rode on before,
And on his nut-brown whiniard bore
The trophy-fiddle and the case,
Plac'd on his shoulder like a niace.
The Knight himself did after ride,
Leading Crowdero by his side;
And tow'd him, if he lagg'd behind,
Like boat against the tide and wind.
Thus grave and solemn they march on,
Until quite thro' the town they'ad gone:
At further end of which there stands
An ancient castle, that commands\(^2\)
Th' adjacent parts; in all the fabrick
You shall not see one stone nor a brick,

\(^1\) The poet making the wooden leg take an oath not to serve again against his captor, is a ridicule on those who obliged their prisoners to take an oath to that purpose. The prisoners taken at Brentford were thus sworn, but Dr. Downing and Mr. Marshall absolved them from this oath, and they immediately served again in the parliament army.

\(^2\) The Stocks are here pictured as an enchanted castle, with infinite wit and humour, and in the true spirit of burlesque poetry.
But all of wood, by pow’rful spell
Of magic made impregnable:
There’s neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeon scarce three inches wide;
With roof so low, that under it
They never stand, but lie or sit,
And yet so foul, that whoso is in,
Is to the middle-leg in prison;
In circle magical confin’d,
With walls of subtle air and wind,
Which none are able to break thorough,
Until they’re freed by head of borough.
Thither arriv’d, the advent’rous Knight
And bold Squire from their steeds alight
At th’ outward wall, near which there stands
A Bastile, built t’imprison hands; ¹
By strange enchantment made to fetter
The lesser parts, and free the greater:
For tho’ the body may creep through,
The hands in grate are fast enow:
And when a circle ’bout the wrist
Is made by beadle exorcist,
The body feels the spur and switch,
As if’t were ridden post by witch,
At twenty miles an hour pace,
And yet ne’er stirs out of the place.
On top of this there is a spire,
On which Sir Knight first bids the Squire
The fiddle, and its spoils, the case,²
In manner of a trophy, place.

¹ A description of the whipping-post.
² Suppose we read,
   His spoils, the fiddle and the case.
That done, they ope the trap-door gate, 1165
And let Crowdero down thereat.
Crowdero making doleful face,
Like hermit poor in pensive place, 1
To dungeon they the wretch commit,
And the survivor of his feet;
But th' other, that had broke the peace,
And head of knighthood, they release,
Th' other delinquent false and forged,
Yet b'ing a stranger he's enlarged; 2
While his comrade, that did no hurt,
Is clapp'd up fast in prison for't:
So justice, while she winks at crimes,
Stumbles on innocence sometimes. 3

1 This was the beginning of a love-song, in great vogue about the year 1650.
2 Dr. Grey supposes very justly, that this may allude to the case of Sir Bernard Gascoign, who was condemned at Colchester with Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle, but respited from execution on account of his being an Italian, and a person of some interest in his own country. See Lord Clarendon's History, vol. iii. p. 137.
3 Dat veniam corvis, vexat censura columbas.— Juv. ii. 1. 63.
The plays and poems of this date commonly ended with a moral reflection.
HUDIBRAS.

PART I. CANTO III.
ARGUMENT.\(^1\)

The scatter'd rout return and rally,
Surround the place; the Knight does sally,
And is made pris'ner: then they seize
Th' enchanted fort by storm, release
Crowdero, and put the Squire in's place:
I should have first said Hudibras.

\(^1\) The Author follows the example of Spenser, and the Italian poets, in the division of his work into parts and cantos. Spenser contents himself with a short title to each division, as "The Legend of Temper-ance," and the like. Butler more fully acquaints his readers what they are to expect, by an argument in the same style with the poem; and frequently convinces them, that he knew how to enliven so dry a thing as a summary. Neither Virgil, Ovid, nor Statius wrote arguments in verse to their respective poems; but critics and grammarians have taken the pains to do it for them.
CANTO III.

Ay me! what perils do environ
The man that meddles with cold iron!1
What plaguy mischiefs and mishaps
Do dog him still with after claps!
For tho' dame Fortune seem to smile,2
And leer upon him for a while,
She'll after shew him, in the nick
Of all his glories, a dog-trick.

1 A parody on the verses in Spenser's Fairy Queen:
Ay me, how many perils do enfold
The virtuous man to make him daily fall.
These two lines are become a kind of proverbial expression, partly owing to the moral reflection, and partly to the jingle of the double rhyme: they are applied sometimes to a man mortally wounded with a sword, and sometimes to a lady who pricks her finger with a needle.
Butler, in his MS. Common Place-book, on this passage, observes:
"Cold iron in Greenland burns as grievously as hot." Some editions read "Ah me," from the Belgie or Teutonic.

2 Οἷς μὲν εἴσωσιν, οἷς εὖ ἀφαιρεῖται τύχη.
Τὸ τῆς τύχης τοι μεταβολάς πολλάς ἔχει.
Ως ποικῖλον πράγμ᾽ ἐτί καὶ πλάνον τύχη.
Fortuna sævo laeta negotio, et
Ludum insolentem ludere pertinax,
Transmutat incertos honores,
Nunc mihi, nunc alii benigna.
Hor. Carm. lib. iii. 29. 1. 49.
This any man may sing or say
I' th' ditty call'd, What if a day?¹
For Hudibras, who thought he'ad won
The field as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock-a-hoop;²
Thinking he'ad done enough to purchase
Thanksgiving-day among the churches,
Wherein his metal and brave worth
 Might be explain'd by holder-forth,
And register'd by fame eternal,
In deathless pages of diurnal ;³
Found in few minutes, to his cost,
He did but count without his host;
And that a turn-stile is more certain
Than, in events of war, Dame Fortune.

For now the late faint-hearted rout,
O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,
Chas'd by the horror of their fear,
From bloody fray of Knight and Bear,
All but the dogs, who, in pursuit
Of the Knight's victory, stood to't,
And most ignobly sought to get
The honour of his blood and sweat,⁴

¹ An old ballad, which begins:
What if a day, or a month, or a year
Crown thy delights,
With a thousand wish't contentings!
Cannot the chance of a night or an hour,
Cross thy delights,
With as many sad tormentings?
² This is crowing or rejoicing. Cock-on-hoop signifies extravagance:
the cock drawn out of a barrel and laid upon the hoop, while the liquor runs to waste, is a proper emblem of inconsiderate conduct.
³ The gazettes or newspapers, on the side of the parliament, were published daily, and called Diurnals. See Cleveland's character of a diurnal-maker.
⁴ An allusion to the complaint of the presbyterian commanders against the independents, when the self-denying ordinance had brought in these and excluded the others. Both Butler and Milton complain of not receiving satisfaction and reward for their labours and expences. This looks as if our poet had an allegorical view in some of his characters and passages.
Seeing the coast was free and clear
O' the conquer'd and the conqueror,
Took heart again, and fac'd about,
As if they meant to stand it out:
For now the half defeated bear,
Attack'd by th' enemy i' th' rear,
Finding their number grew too great
For him to make a safe retreat,
Like a bold chieftain fac'd about;
But wisely doubting to hold out,
Gave way to fortune, and with haste
Fac'd the proud foe, and fled, and fac'd,
Retiring still, until he found
H'ad got the advantage of the ground;
And then as valiantly made head
To check the foe, and forthwith fled,
Leaving no art untry'd, nor trick
Of warrior stout and politick,
Until, in spite of hot pursuit,
He gain'd a pass, to hold dispute
On better terms, and stop the course
Of the proud foe. With all his force
He bravely charg'd, and for a while Fore'd their whole body to recoil;
But still their numbers so increas'd,
He found himself at length oppress'd,
And all evasions so uncertain,
To save himself for better fortune,
That he resolv'd, rather than yield,
To die with honour in the field,
And sell his hide and carcase at
A price as high and desperate
As e'er he could. This resolution
He forthwith put in execution,
And bravely threw himself among
Th' enemy i' th' greatest throng;
But what could single valour do
Against so numerous a foe?
Yet much he did, indeed too much
To be believ'd, where th' odds were such;
But one against a multitude,
Is more than mortal can make good:
For while one party he oppos'd,
His rear was suddenly enclos'd,
And no room left him for retreat,
Or fight against a foe so great.
For now the mastives, charging home,
To blows and handy-gripes were come;
While manfully himself he bore,
And, setting his right foot before,
He rais'd himself to show how tall
His person was above them all.
This equal shame and envy stirr'd
In th' enemy, that one should beard
So many warriors, and so stout,
As he had done, and stav'd it out,
Disdaining to lay down his arms,
And yield on honourable terms.
Enraged thus, some in the rear
Attack'd him, and some ev'ry where,
Till down he fell; yet falling fought,
And, being down, still laid about;
As Widdrington, in doleful dumps,
Is said to fight upon his stumps.

1 Thus Spenser in his Fairy Queen:
   Like dastard curs, that having at a bay
   The savage beast, emboss'd in weary chace,
   Dare not adventure on the stubborn prey,
   Ne bite before, but come from place to place
   To get a snatch, when turned is his face.

2 In the famous song of Chevy-chase:
   For Witherington needs must I wail,
   As one in doleful dumps,
   For when his legs were smitten off
   He fought upon his stumps.
But all, alas! had been in vain,
And he inevitably slain,
If Trulla and Cerdon, in the nick,
To rescue him had not been quick:
For Trulla, who was light of foot,
As shafts which long-field Parthians shoot,¹
But not so light as to be borne
Upon the ears of standing corn,²
Or trip it o’er the water quicker
Than witches, when their staves they liquor,³
As some report, was got among
The foremost of the martial throng;
Where pitying the vanquish’d bear,
She call’d to Cerdon, who stood near,

The battle of Chevy chase, or Otterbourne, on the borders of Scotland, was fought on St. Oswald’s day, August 5, 1388, between the families of Percy and Douglas—the song was probably wrote much after that time, though long before 1588, as Hearne supposes.—The sense of the stanza is, I, as one in doleful dumps (deep concern) must lament Witherington.

In the old copy of the ballad, the lines run thus;
For Wetharryngton my harte was wo
That ever he slayne shulde be
For when both his leggis weare hewyne in to
He knyled and fought upon his kne.

¹ Bishop Warburton offers an amendment here, which improves the sense, viz. longfiled, or drawn up in long ranks. But as all the editions read long-field, I was unwilling to alter it. Perhaps the poet may be justified in the use of this epithet, from the account which Trogus gives of the Parthians. He says, “they were banished, and vagabond Scythians; their name, in the Scythian language, signifying banished. “They settled in the deserts near Hircania; and spread themselves ‘over vast open fields and wide champaigns – ‘immensa ac profunda ‘camporum.’ They are continually on horseback: They fight, consult, and transact all their business on horseback.” Justin, lib. xli.

² Alluding to Camilla, whose speed is hyperbolically described by Virgil, at the end of the seventh Æneid:
Illia vel intactae segetis per summa volaret
Gramina, nec teneras cursu lasisset aristas:
Vel mare per medium, fluctu suspenso tumenti,
Ferret iter, celeres nec tingeret æquore plantas.

³ Witches are said to ride upon broomsticks, and to liquor, or grease them, that they may go faster.
Viewing the bloody fight; to whom,
Shall we, quoth she, stand still hum-drum,
And see stout bruin, all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown?
Such feats already he 'as achiev'd,
In story not to be believ'd,
And 'twould to us be shame enough,
Not to attempt to fetch him off.

I would, quoth he, venture a limb
To second thee, and rescue him:
But then we must about it straight,
Or else our aid will come too late:
Quarter he scorns, he is so stout,
And therefore cannot long hold out.
This said, they wav'd their weapons round
About their heads, to clear the ground;
And joining forces, laid about
So fiercely, that th' amazed rout
Turn'd tail again, and straight begun,
As if the devil drove, to run.

Meanwhile th' approach'd th' place where bruin
Was now engag'd to mortal ruin:
The conqu'ring foe they soon assail'd;
First Trulla stav'd, and Cerdon tail'd,¹
Until their mastives loos'd their hold:
And yet, alas! do what they could,
The worsted bear came off with store
Of bloody wounds, but all before:
For as Achilles, dipt in pond,
Was anabaptiz'd free from wound,
Made proof against dead-doing steel
All over, but the pagan heel;²

¹ Trulla put her staff between the dogs and the bear, in order to part them; and Cerdon drew the dogs away by their tails.
² This is in the true spirit of burlesque; as the anabaptists, by their dipping, were made free from sin, so was Achilles by the same operation performed by his mother Thetis, rendered free from wounds.
So did our champion's arms defend
All of him but the other end,
His head and ears, which in the martial
Encounter lost a leathern parcel;
For as an Austrian archduke once
Had one ear, which in ducatoons
Is half the coin, in battle par'd
Close to his head, so bruin far'd;
But tugg'd and pull'd on th' other side,
Like scriv'ner newly crucify'd;
Or like the late-corrected leathern
Ears of the circumcised brethren.

1 Albert, archduke of Austria, brother to the emperor Rodolph the second, had one of his ears grazed by a spear, when he had taken off his helmet, and was endeavouring to rally his soldiers, in an engagement with prince Maurice of Nassau, ann. 1598. We read, in ancient song, of a different duke of that family:

Richard Cœur de Lion erst king of this land
He the lion gored with his naked hand;
The false duke of Austria nothing did he fear.
But his son he kill'd with a box on the ear.
Besides his famous acts done in the holy land.

A ducatoon is the half of a ducat. Before the invention of milling, coins were frequently cut into parts: thus, there were quarter-ducats, and two-thirds of a ducat.

2 In those days lawyers or scriveners, if guilty of dishonest practices, were sentenced to lose their ears. In modern times they seldom are so punished.

3 Pryne, Bastwick, and Burton, stood in the pillory, and had their ears cut off, by order of the Star-chamber, in 1637, for writing seditious libels. They were banished into remote parts of the kingdom; but recalled by the parliament in 1640. At their return the populace shewed them every respect. They were met, near London, by ten thousand persons, who carried boughs and flowers. The members of the Star-chamber, concerned in punishing them, were fined in the sum of 4000l., for each.

Prynne was a noted lawyer. He had been once pilloried before; and now lost the remainder of his ears: though, in lord Strafford's Letters, it is said they were sewed on again, and grew as well as ever. His publication was a pamphlet entitled, News from Ipswich. See Epistle of Hudibras to Sidrophel, l. 13.

Bastwick was a physician. He wrote a pamphlet, in elegant Latin, called Flagellum Episcoporum. He was the author too of a silly litany, full of abuse.

Burton, minister of St. Matthew's, in Friday street, London, preached a sermon, Nov. 5, entitled, God and the king. This he printed; and,
But gentle Trulla ¹ into th’ ring 155
He wore in’s nose convey’d a string,
With which she march’d before, and led
The warrior to a grassy bed,
As authors write, in a cool shade,
Which eglantine and roses made:
Close by a softly mur’ring stream,
Where lovers us’d to loll and dream:
There leaving him to his repose,
Secured from pursuit of foes,
And wanting nothing but a song,²
And a well-tun’d theorbo hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain.
His tug’d ears suffer’d, with a strain.³
They both drew up, to march in quest
Of his great leader, and the rest.
For Orsin, who was more renown’d
For stout maintaining of his ground
In standing fights, than for pursuit,
As being not so quick of foot,⁴
Was not long able to keep pace
With others that pursu’d the chase, being questioned about it, he defended it, enlarged, and dedicated it to the king himself. After his discharge, he preached and printed another sermon, entitled, The Protestation protested.

¹ Et fotum gremio Deus tollit in altos
    Idalae lucos, ubi mollis amaracu illum
    Floribus, et dulci aspirans amplectitur umbra.
Virgil. Æneid. i. 692.

And Johannes Secundus, Eleg. Cum Venus Ascanium.

Mr. Butler frequently gives us specimens of poetical imagery, which lead us to believe that he might have ranked with the first class of elegant writers.

² This is a banter upon some of the romance writers of those days.
³ In Grey’s edition it is thus pointed:
    His tug’d ears suffer’d; with a strain
    They both drew up—

But I should rather suppose the poet meant a well-tuned theorbo, to case the pain with a strain, that is, with music and a song.

⁴ Thus Ajax is described by Homer:
    Ὄηθ’ ἄν Ἀχιλλὶ ῥηξ’ ἄφρος χρωῆσιν;
    Ἐν γ’ αὐτοταϊγ’ τοσί ἐ’ οὐπως ἵστων ἔριζεν.
Il. xiii. 324.
But found himself left far behind,
Both out of heart and out of wind;
Griev’d to behold his bear pursu’d
So basely by a multitude,
And like to fall, not by the prowess,
But numbers, of his coward foes.
He rag’d, and kept as heavy a coil
As Stout Hercules for loss of Hylas;
Forcing the vallies to repeat
The accents of his sad regret:

1 Hercules, when he bewails the loss of Hylas:

--- Volat ordine nullo
Cuncta petens; nunc ad ripas, dejectaque saxis
Flumina; nunc notas nemorum procurrit ad umbras:
Rursus Hylan, et rursus Hylan per longa reclamat
Avia: responsant silvae, et vagat certat imago.

Echoes have frequently been employed by the poets. Mr. Butler ridicules this false kind of wit, and produces answers which are sufficiently whimsical. The learned Erasmus composed a dialogue upon this subject: his Echo seems to have been an extraordinary linguist; for she answers the person, with whom she converses, in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew.

"The conceit of making Echo talk sensibly," says Mr. Addison, Spectator, No. 59. "and give rational answers, if it could be excusable "in any writer, would be so in Ovid, where he introduces Echo as a "nymph, before she was worn away into nothing but a voice. The "passage relating her conversation with Narcissus is very ingenious:"

Forte puer, comitum seductus ab agmine fido,
Dixerat, Ecquis adest? et Adest, responderat Echo.
Hie stupet: utque aciern partes divisit in omnes;
Voce, Veni, clamat magnâ. Vocat illa vocantem.
Respicit: et nullo rursus veniente, Quid, inquit,
Me fugis? et totidem, quot dixit, verba recepit.
Perstat; et alteræ deceptus imagine vocis;
Huc coâcamus, ait; nullique libentius unquam
Responsura sono, Coâcamus, retulit Echo.

Metamorph. iii. 379.

A friend of mine, who boasted much of his park and gardens in Ireland, among other curiosities mentioned an extraordinary Echo, that would return answers to any thing which was said. Of what kind?—inquired a gentleman present. Why, says he, if I call out loud, How do you do, Coaner? the Echo immediately answers, Very thank you, sir.

Metamorph. iii. 379.
He beat his breast, and tore his hair,
For loss of his dear cronj bear;
That Echo, from the hollow ground,
His doleful wailings did resound.

More wistfully, by many times,
Than in small poets' splay-foot rhymes,
That make her, in their ruthless stories,
To answer to interrogatories,
And most unconscionably depose
To things of which she nothing knows;
And when she has said all she can say,
'Tis wrested to the lover's fancy.

Quoth he, O whither, Zacked Bruni,
Art thou fled to my — Echo, ruin.

I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge a step,
For fear. Quoth Echo, Marry guep.1

Am not I here to take thy part?
Then what has quail'd thy stubborn heart?2

a tragedy now lost, had a scene of this kind, which Aristophanes makes sport with in his Feast of Ceres.

In the Anthologia, lib. iii. 6, is an epigram of Leonidas, and in the 4th book are six lines by Gauradas. See Brunck's Analecta, vol. ii.

1 A sort of imprecation of Mary come up, praying the Virgin Mary to help; though some derive it otherwise. See Bishop Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, and v. 16 of the Wanton Wife of Bath.

2 Quail, to cause to shrink, or faint; from A. S. cwealrn, mors,
Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled?
Nor did I ever wince or grudge it,
For thy dear sake. Quoth she, *Mum budget.*¹
Thinks't thou 'twill not be laid i' th' dish²
Thou turn'dst thy back? Quoth Echo, Pish.
To run from those th' hadst overcome
Thus cowardly? Quoth Echo, Mum.
But what a-vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy?
Or, if thou hast no thought of me,
Nor what I have endur'd for thee,
Yet shame and honour might prevail
To keep thee thus from turning tail:
For who would grutch to spend his blood in His honour's cause? Quoth she, a Puddin.
This said, his grief to anger turn'd,
Which in his manly stomach burn'd;
Thirst of revenge, and wrath, in place
Of sorrow, now began to blaze.
He vow'd the authors of his woe
Should equal vengeance undergo;
And with their bones and flesh pay dear
For what he suffer'd and his bear.
This b'ing resolv'd, with equal speed
And rage, he hasted to proceed
To action straight, and giving o'er
To search for bruin any more, ewellan, occidere. A qualm, deliquium animi, brevior mors. The word is frequently used in ancient songs and ballads.

¹ A term denoting silence.
² [I come to her in white, and cry mum; and she cries budget; and by that we know one another. — Merry Wives, Act v. sc. 2.]

Sir John Harr. Epigr. i. 27.]
He went in quest of Hudibras,
To find him out, where'er he was;
And if he were above ground, vow'd
He'd ferret him, lurk where he wou'd.

But scarce had he a furlong on
This resolute adventure gone,
When he encounter'd with that crew
Whom Hudibras did late subdue.

Honour, revenge, contempt, and shame,
Did equally their breasts inflame.
'Mong these the fierce Magnano was,
And Talgol, foe to Hudibras;
Cerdon and Colon, warriors stout,
And resolute, as ever fought;
Whom furious Orsin thus bespoke:

Shall we, quoth he, thus basely brook
The vile affront that paltry ass,
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, with vapouring and huffing,
Have put upon us, like tame cattle,
As if th' had routed us in battle?
For my part, it shall ne'er be said
I for the washing gave my head;
Nor did I turn my back for fear
Of them, but losing of my bear,
Which now I'm like to undergo;
For whether these fell wounds, or no,

1 That is, behaved cowardly, or surrendered at discretion: jeering obliquely perhaps at the anabaptistical notions of Ralpho. — Hooker, or V Fowler, in his description of Exeter, written about 1584, speaking of the parson of St. Thomas, who was hanged during the siege, says, "he was "a stout man, who would not give his head for the polling, nor his "beard for the washing." Grey gives an apt quotation from Cupid's Revenge, by Beaumont and Fletcher, Act iv.

1st. Citizen. It holds, he dies this morning.
2d. Citizen. Then happy man be his fortune.
1st. Citizen. And so am I and forty more good fellows, that will not give their heads for the washing.
He has receiv'd in fight, are mortal,
Is more than all my skill can foretel;
Nor do I know what is become
Of him, more than the Pope of Rome.
But if I can but find them out
That caus'd it, as I shall no doubt,
Where'er th' in hugger-mugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handiwork,
And wish that they had rather dar'd
To pull the devil by the beard.

Quoth Cerdon, noble Orsin, th' hast
Great reason to do as thou say'st,
And so has ev'ry body here,
As well as thou hast, or thy bear:
Others may do as they see good;
But if this twig be made of wood
That will hold tack, I'll make the fur
Fly 'bout the ears of that old cur,
And th' other mongrel vermin, Ralph,
That brav'd us all in his behalf.
Thy bear is safe, and out of peril,
Tho' lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill;
Myself and Trulla made a shift
To help him out at a dead lift;
And having brought him bravely off,
Have left him where he's safe enough:
There let him rest; for if we stay,
The slaves may hap to get away.

This said, they all engag'd to join
Their forces in the same design.
And forthwith put themselves, in search
Of Hudibras, upon their march:
Where leave we them awhile, to tell
What the victorious Knight befell;
For such, Crowdero being fast
In dungeon shut, we left him last.
Triumphant laurels seem'd to grow
No where so green as on his brow;
Laden with which, as well as tir'd
With conqu'ring toil, he now retir'd
Unto a neighbour'ing castle by,
To rest his body, and apply
Fit medicines to each glorious bruise
He got in fight, reds, blacks, and blues;
To mollify th' uneasy pang
Of ev'ry honourable bang.
Which b'ing by skilful midwife drest,
He laid him down to take his rest.
But all in vain: he 'ad got a hurt
O' th' inside, of a deadlier sort,
By Cupid made, who took his stand
Upon a widow's jointure-land, 1
For he, in all his am'rous battles,
No 'dvantage finds like goods and chattels,
Drew home his bow, and aiming right,
Let fly an arrow at the Knight;
The shaft against a rib did glance,
And gall him in the purtenance; 2

---

1 Stable-stand is a term of the forest laws, and signifies a place under some convenient cover, where a deer-stealer fixes himself, and keeps watch for the purpose of killing deer as they pass by. From the place it came also to be applied to the person; and any man taken in the forest in that situation, with a gun or bow, was presumed to be an offender, and had the name of a Stable-stand. From a note by Hanmer on Shakespeare's Winter Tale, Act ii. sc. 1. The widow is supposed to have been Mrs. Tomson, who had a jointure of 200l. a year.

2 A ludicrous name for the knight's heart: taken, probably, from a
HUDIBRAS.

But time had somewhat 'swag'd his pain,
After he had found his suit in vain:
For that proud dame, for whom his soul
Was burnt in's belly like a coal,
That belly that so oft' did ake,
And suffer griping for her sake,
Till purging comfits, and ant's eggs¹
Had almost brought him off his legs,—
Us'd him so like a base rascallion,
That old Pyg — what d' y' call him — malion,
That cut his mistress out of stone²
Had not so hard a hearted one.
She had a thousand judish tricks,
Worse than a mule that flings and kicks;
calf's or lamb's head and purtenance, as it is vulgarly called, instead of appertenance, which, among other entrails, contains the heart.

¹ Ants' eggs were supposed, by some, to be great antidotes to love passions.* I cannot divine what are the medical qualities of them. Palladius, de re rustica, 29. 2. directs ants' eggs to be given to young pheasants.— Plutarch ii. 928. and ii. 974. says that bears, when they are sick, cure themselves by swallowing ants. Frosted caraway seeds (common sugar plumbs) are not unlike ants' eggs.

² Pygmalion, as the mythologists say, fell in love with a statue of his own carving; and Venus, to gratify him, turned it into a living woman.
The truth of the story is supposed to be, that he had a very beautiful wife, whose skin far surpassed the whiteness of ivory.— Or it may mean, to shew the painter's or statuary's vanity, and extreme fondness of his own performance. See Fr. Junius, in Catalog. Architect. Pictor. Statarior. &c. p. 188. 163. Stone, instead of ivory, that the widow's hard heart, v. 330. might be the nearer resembled: so brazen, for stone, in Pope's description of Cibber's brothers in the Dunciad, i. 32. that the resemblance between him and them might be the stronger. So in our poet a goose, instead of some more considerable fowl, is described with talons, only because Hudibras was to be compared to a fowl with such: but making a goose have talons, and Hudibras like a goose, to which wise animal he had before compared a justice, P. i. c. i. v. 75, heightens the ridicule. See P. i. c. iii. v. 525.

If the reader loves a punning epitaph, let him peruse the following, on a youth who died for love of Molly Stone:
Molle fuit saxum, saxum, O! si Molle fuisse,
Non foret hic subter, sed super esset ei.

* Verum equidem miror formicarum hac in parte potentiam, quum quatuor tantum in potu sumptas, omnem Veneris, ac coëundi potentiam auferre tradit Brunfelsius.
'Mong which one cross-grain'd freak she had,
As insolent as strange and mad;
She could love none but only such
As scorn'd and hated her as much.
'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;
Not love, if any lov'd her: ha-day!
So cowards never use their might,
But against such as will not fight.
So some diseases have been found
Only to seize upon the sound.
He that gets her by heart, must say her
The back-way, like a witch's prayer.
Mean while the Knight had no small task
To compass what he durst not ask:
He loves, but dares not make the motion;
Her ignorance is his devotion:

1 Such a capricious kind of love is described by Horace: Satires book i. ii. 105.

Leporem venator ut altâ
In nive sectatur, positum sic tangere nolit:
Cantat et apponit: meus est amor huic similis; nam
Transvolat in medio posita, et fugientia captat.

Nearly a translation of the eleventh epigram of Callimachus, which ends, χ’όμος ἐρως τοῖσι τὰ μὲν φεύγουσα εὑρέων obis, τὰ δ’ ἐν μέσῳ κύμενα παρπέταται.

2 In the edition of 1678 it is Hey-day, but either may stand, as they both signify a mark of admiration. See Skinner and Junius.

3 It is common for horses, as well as men, to be afflicted with sciatica, or rheumatism, to a great degree for weeks together, and when they once get clear of the fit," as we term it, "have perhaps never heard any more of it while they lived: for these distempers, with some others, called salutary distempers, seldom or never seize upon an unsound body." See Bracken's Farriery Improved, ii. 46. The meaning then, from v. 338, is this: As the widow loved none that were disposed to love her, so cowards fight with none that are disposed to fight with them: so some diseases seize upon none that are already distempered, and in appearance proper subjects for them, but upon those only who, through the firmness of their constitution, seem least disposed for such attacks.

4 That is, her ignorance of his love makes him adore and pursue her with greater ardour: but the poet here means to banter the papists, who deny to the common people the use of the bible or prayer book in the vulgar tongue: hence they are charged with asserting, that ignorance is the mother of devotion.
Like caitiff vile, that for misdeed
Rides with his face to rump of steed;¹
Or rowing scull, he's fain to love,
Look one way, and another move;
Or like a tumbler that does play
His game, and looks another way,²
Until he seize upon the coney;
Just so does he by matrimony.
But all in vain: her subtle snout
Did quickly wind his meaning out;
Which she return'd with too much scorn,
To be by man of honour borne;
Yet much he bore, until the distress
He suffer'd from his spightful mistress
Did stir his stomach, and the pain
He had endur'd from her disdain
Turn'd to regret so resolute,
That he resolv'd to wave his suit,
And either to renounce her quite,
Or for a while play least in sight.
This resolution b'ing put on,
He kept some months, and more had done,
But being brought so nigh by fate,
The vict'ry he achiev'd so late
Did set his thoughts agog, and ope
A door to discontinu'd hope,³
That seem'd to promise he might win
His dame too, now his hand was in;

¹ Dr. Grey supposes this may allude to five members of the army, who, on the 6th of March, 1648, were forced to undergo this punishment, for petitioning the Rump for relief of the oppressed commonwealth.
² A sort of dog, that rolls himself in a heap, and tumbles over, disguising his shape and motion, till he is within reach of his game. This dog is called by the Latins Vertagus. See Caius de canibus Britannicis, and Martial. lib. xiv. Epig. 200.
³ Non sibi, sed domino venatur vertagus acer, Illæsum leporem qui tibi dente feret.
And that his valour, and the honour
He 'ad newly gain'd, might work upon her:
These reasons made his mouth to water,
With am'rous loungings, to be at her.

Thought he, unto himself, who knows
But this brave conquest o'er my foes
May reach her heart, and make that stoop,
As I but now have forc'd the troop?
If nothing can oppugne love,¹
And virtue invious ways can prove,²
What may not he confide to do
That brings both love and virtue too?
But thou bring'st valour too, and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit.

Valour's a mouse-trap, wit a gin,
Which women oft' are taken in:³
Then, Hudibras, why should'st thou fear
To be, that art a conqueror?

Fortune the audacious doth juvare,
But lets the timidous⁴ miscarry:
Then, while the honour thou hast got
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely thou hadst best,
And trust thy fortune with the rest.

Such thoughts as these the Knight did keep
More than his bangs, or fleas, from sleep;
And as an owl, that in a barn
Sees a mouse creeping in the corn,
Sits still, and shuts his round blue eyes,
As if he slept, until he spies

¹ Read oppugnē, to make three syllables
² Virtus, recludens immeritis mori
   Cælum, negatæ tentat iter viā.
   Horat. Carm. lib. iii. 2.
³ We often see women captivated by a red coat, or a copy of verses.
⁴ Audacios, and timidos, two words from audax and timidus; the hero being in a latinizing humour.
The little beast within his reach,
Then starts, and seizes on the wretch;
So from his couch the Knight did start,
To seize upon the widow's heart;
Crying, with hasty tone and hoarse,
Ralpho, dispatch, to horse, to horse!
And 'twas but time; for now the rout,
We left engag'd to seek him out,
By speedy marches were advance'd
Up to the fort where he ensconc'd,
And had the avenues all possesst
About the place, from east to west.
That done, awhile they made a halt,
To view the ground, and where t' assault:
Then call'd a council, which was best,
By siege, or onslaught, to invest
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By storm and onslaught to proceed.
This b'ing resolv'd, in comely sort
They now drew up t'attack the fort;
When Hudibras, about to enter
Upon another gates adventure,
To Ralpho call'd aloud to arm,
Not dreaming of approaching storm.
Whether dame fortune, or the care
Of angel bad, or tutelar,
Did arm, or thrust him on a danger,
To which he was an utter stranger,
That foresight might, or might not, blot
The glory he had newly got;

1 An army is said to be ensconced, when it is fortified or defended by a small fort or sconce.
2 Onslaught, that is a coup de main, a sudden storming or attack.
3 See Sanderson, p. 47. third sermon ad clerum. "If we be of the "spirituality, there should be in us another gates manifestation of the "spirit."
Or to his shame it might be said,
They took him napping in his bed:
To them we leave it to expound,
That deal in sciences profound.

His courser scarce he had bestrid,
And Ralpho that on which he rid,
When setting ope the postern gate,
To take the field and sally at,
The foe appear'd, drawn up and drill'd,\(^1\)
Ready to charge them in the field.
This somewhat startled the bold knight,
Surpris'd with th' unexpected sight:
The bruises of his bones and flesh
He thought began to smart afresh;
Till recollecting wonted courage,
His fear was soon converted to rage,
And thus he spoke: The coward foe,
Whom we but now gave quarter to,
Look, yonder's rally'd, and appears
As if they had outrun their fears;
The glory we did lately get,
The Fates command us to repeat;\(^2\)
And to their wills we must succumb,
Quocunque trahunt, 'tis our doom.
This is the same numeric crew
Which we so lately did subdue;
The self-same individuals that
Did run, as mice do from a cat,
When we courageously did wield
Our martial weapons in the field,

---

\(^1\) To drill, is to exercise and teach the military discipline.

\(^2\) This is exactly in the style of victorious leaders. Thus Hannibal encouraged his men: "These are the same Romans whom you have "beaten so often." And Octavius addressed his soldiers at Actium: "It is the same Antony whom you once drove out of the field before
To tug for victory: and when
We shall our shining blades agen
Brandish in terror o'er our heads,¹
They'll straight resume their wonted dreads.

Fear is an ague, that forsakes
And haunts, by fits, those whom it takes;
And they'll opine they feel the pain
And blows they felt to-day, again.
Then let us boldly charge them home,
And make no doubt to overcome.

This said, his courage to inflame,
He call'd upon his mistress' name,²
His pistol next he cock'd anew,
And out his nut-brown whinyard drew;³
And placing Ralpho in the front,⁴
Reserv'd himself to bear the brunt,
As expert warriors use; then ply'd,
With iron heel, his courser's side,
Conveying sympathetic speed
From heel of knight to heel of steed.

Meanwhile the foe, with equal rage
And speed, advancing to engage,
Both parties now were drawn so close,
Almost to come to handy-blows:
When Orsin first let fly a stone
At Ralpho; not so huge a one

¹ Cervantes, upon almost every occasion, makes Quixote invoke his Dulcinea. Mr. Jarvis, in his life of Cervantes, observes, from the old collection of Spanish laws, that they hold it a noble thing to call upon the name of their mistresses, that their hearts may swell with an increase of courage, and their shame be the greater if they fail in their attempt.

² This word whinyard signifies a sword. Skinner derives it from the Saxon winnan, to win or acquire honour: but, as it is chiefly used in contempt, Johnson derives it from whin, furze; so whinniard, the short scythe or instrument with which country people cut whins.

³ Like Thraso in Terence. Eunuchus, iv. 7. who says, "Ego ero post principia."
As that which Diomed did maul
Æneas on the bum withal;¹
Yet big enough, if rightly hurl’d,
T’ have sent him to another world,
Whether above ground, or below,
Which saints, twice dipt, are destin’d to.²
The danger startled the bold Squire,
And made him some few steps retire;
But Hudibras advance’d to’s aid,
And rous’d his spirits half dismay’d:
He wisely doubting lest the shot
O’ th’ enemy, now growing hot,
Might at a distance gall, press’d close
To come, pell-mell, to handy-blows,
And that he might their aim decline,
Advanc’d still in an oblique line;
But prudently forbore to fire,
Till breast to breast he had got higher;³
As expert warriors use to do,
When hand to hand they charge their foe.
This order the advent’rous Knight,
Most soldier-like, observ’d in fight,
When Fortune, as she’s wont, turn’d fickle,
And for the foe began to stickle.
The more shame for her Goodyship
To give so near a friend the slip.

¹ — ὁ εἰς χειράκιον λάβε χιτί
Τινάδ θέοι, μεγαῖρογοι, ὅ ὁμίχυ’ γ’ ἄνκρε φέρομεν,
Ὅ ήν μὴν εροτει ἐσ’ ὁ εἰς μὴν ρεά πᾶλλε καὶ ὀσὲς
Τῷ ἄλλῳ Αἰνίατι κατ’ ἵσχίον, ἐθελα τε μέρος
Ἅσχιο ἐντριφθαῖ.
Ilia v. 302.

² And Juvenal:
— nec hunc lapidem, quali se Turnus, et Ajax;
Vel quo Tydides percussit ponderi coxam
Æneae; sed quem valeant emittere dextrae
Illis dissimiles, et nostro tempore natus.
Sat. xv. 65.

³ The anabaptists thought they obtained a higher degree of saintship by being re-baptized.

² Oliver Cromwell ordered his soldiers to reserve their fire till they were near enough the enemy to be sure of doing execution.
For Colon, choosing out a stone,
Levell'd so right, it thump'd upon
His manly paunch, with such a force,
As almost beat him off his horse,
He loos'd his whinyard, and the rein,
But laying fast hold on the mane,
Preserv'd his seat: and, as a goose
In death contracts his talons close,
So did the Knight, and with one claw
The trigger of his pistol draw.
The gun when off; and as it was Still fatal to stout Hudibras,
In all his feats of arms, when least
He dreamt of it, to prosper best
So now he far'd: the shot let fly,
At random, 'mong the enemy,
Pierce'd Talgol's gaberdine, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing
Lodg'd in Magnano's brass habergeon,
Who straight, A surgeon cry'd — a surgeon!
He tumbled down, and, as he fell,
Did murder! murder! murder! yell.
This startled their whole body so,
That if the Knight had not let go
His arms, but been in warlike plight,
H' had won, the second time, the fight;
As, if the Squire had but fall'n on,
He had inevitably done:
But he, diverted with the care
Of Hudibras his wound, forbare

1 An old French word for a smock frock, or coarse coat,
2 Habergeon, a diminutive of the French word hauberg, a breast-plate; and derived from [the German] hals, collum, and bergen seu pergen, tegere. See Chaucer. Here it signifies the tinker's budget.
3 To howl, or use a lamentable cry, from the Greek, idΔημος, or δελυγω, ejulo, a mournful song used at funerals, and practised to this day in some parts of Ireland, and the highlands of Scotland.
To press th' advantage of his fortune,
While danger did the rest dishearten.
For he with Cerdon b'ing engag'd
In close encounter, they both wag'd
The fight so well, 'twas hard to say
Which side was like to get the day.
And now the busy work of death
Had tir'd them so, they 'greed to breathe,
Preparing to renew the fight,
When th' hard disaster of the knight,
And th' other party, did divert
And force their sullen rage to part.
Ralpho press'd up to Hudibras,
And Cerdon where Magnano was,
Each striving to confirm his party
With stout encouragements and hearty.

Quoth Ralpho, Courage, valiant Sir,
And let revenge and honour stir
Your spirits up; once more fall on,
The shatter'd foe begins to run:
For if but half so well you knew
To use your vict'ry as subdued,¹
They durst not, after such a blow
As you have giv'n them, face us now;
But from so formidable a soldier,
Had fled like crows when they smell powder.
Thrice have they seen your sword aloft
Wav'd o'er their heads, and fled as oft:
But if you let them recollect
Their spirits, now dismay'd and check'd,

¹ This perhaps has some reference to prince Rupert, who was generally successful at his first onset, but lost his advantage by too long a pursuit. Echard, vol. ii. p. 480. The same is said of Hannibal, Florus, lib. ii. cap. 6. Dubium deinde non crat, quin ultimum illum diem habitura fuerit Roma quintumque intra diem epulari Annibal in capitolio potuerit, si (quod Penum illum dixisse Adherbalem Bonilcaris ferunt) Annibal quemadmodum seiret vincere, sic uti victoria scisset. Cæsar said the same of Pompey. Sueton. in Vita.
CANTO III. HUDIBRAS.

You'll have a harder game to play
Than yet y' have had, to get the day.

Thus spoke the stout Squire; but was heard
By Hudibras with small regard.
His thoughts were fuller of the bang
He lately took, than Ralph's harangue;
To which he answer'd, Cruel fate,
Tells me thy counsel comes too late,
The clotted blood 1 within my hose,
That from my wounded body flows,
With mortal crisis doth portend
My days to appropinque 2 an end.
I am for action now unfit,
Either of fortitude or wit;
Fortune, my foe, begins to frown,
Resolv'd to pull my stomach down.
I am not apt, upon a wound,
Or trivial basting, to despond;
Yet I'd be loath my days to curtail;
For if I thought my wounds not mortal,
Or that w' had time enough as yet
To make an honourable retreat,
'Twere the best course; but if they find
We fly, and leave our arms behind
For them to seize on, the dishonour,
And danger too, is such, I'll sooner
Stand to it boldly, and take quarter,
To let them see I am no starter.
In all the trade of war no feat
Is nobler than a brave retreat:
For those that run away, and fly,
Take place at least o'th' enemy.

1 In some editions — the knotted blood.
2 One of the knight's hard words, signifying to approach, or draw near to.
This said, the Squire, with active speed,
Dismounted from his bony ¹ steed
To seize the arms, which by mischance
Fell from the bold Knight in a trance.
These being found out, and restor'd
To Hudibras, their natural lord,
The active Squire, with might and main,
Prepar'd in haste to mount again.
Thrice he essay'd to mount aloft;
But by his weighty bum, as oft
He was pull'd back: 'till having found
Th' advantage of the rising ground,
Thither he led his warlike steed,
And having plac'd him right, with speed
Prepar'd again to scale the beast,
When Orsin, who had newly drest
The bloody scar upon the shoulder
Of Talgol, with Promethean powder,²
And now was searching for the shot
That laid Magnano on the spot,
Beheld the sturdy Squire aforesaid
Preparing to climb up his horse-side;
He left his cure, and laying hold
Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cry'd out, 'Tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally:
Let us that are unhurt and whole
Fall on, and happy man be's dole.³

¹ In some editions it is bonny, but I prefer the reading of 1678.
² See canto ii. v. 225. — In a long enumeration of his several beneficent inventions, Prometheus, in Æschylus, boasts especially of his communicating to mankind the knowledge of medicines.
³ See Shakspeare, Taming the Shrew, Act i. Sc. 1. and Winter's Tale, Act i. Sc. 2.

Dole, from daelan, to distribute, signifies the shares formerly given
This said, like to a thunderbolt,
He flew with fury to th' assault,
Striving the enemy to attack
Before he reach'd his horse's back.
Ralpho was mounted now, and gotten O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,
Wriggling his body to recover
His seat, and cast his right leg over;
When Orsin, rushing in, bestow'd
On horse and man so heavy a load,
The beast was startled, and begun
To kick and fling like mad, and run,
Bearing the tough Squire, like a sack,
Or stout king Richard, on his back;¹
'Till stumbling, he threw him down,²
Sore bruis'd, and cast into a swoon.
Meanwhile the Knight began to rouse
The sparkles of his wonted prowess;
He thrust his hand into his hose,
And found, both by his eyes and nose,
'Twas only choler, and not blood,
That from his wounded body flow'd.³

This, with the hazard of the Squire,
Inflam'd him with despightful ire;
Courageously he fac'd about,
And drew his other pistol out,

at funerals and other occasions, May happiness be his share or lot,
May the lot of the happy man be his. As we say of a person at the point of death, God rest his soul.

¹ After the battle of Bosworth field, the body of Richard III. was stripped, and, in an ignominious manner, laid across a horse's back like a slaughter'd deer; his head and arms hanging on one side, and his legs on the other, besmeared with blood and dirt.

² We must hear read stumbling, to make three syllables, as in verse 770 lighten ing, so in 875 read sarcasms; or, perhaps, we may read stumbling, sarcasms, &c.

³ The delicate reader will easily guess what is here intended by the word choler.
And now had half-way bent the cock, 665
When Cerdon gave so fierce a shock,
With sturdy truncheon, 'thwart his arm,
That down it fell, and did no harm:
Then stoutly pressing on with speed,
Essay'd to pull him of his steed,
The Knight his sword had only left,
With which he Cerdon's head had cleft,
Or at the least cropt off a limb,
But Orsin came and rescu'd him.
He with his lance attack'd the Knight
Upon his quarters opposite.
But as a bark, that in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruis'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to:
So far'd the Knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t'oppose;
'Till Orsin charging with his lance
At Hudibras, by spightful chance
Hit Cerdon such a bang, as stunn'd
And laid him flat upon the ground.
At this the Knight began to cheer up,
And raising up himself on stirrup,
Cry'd out, Victoria! lie thou there,¹
And I shall straight dispatch another,
To bear thee company in death: ²
But first I'll halt awhile, and breathe.
As well he might: for Orsin griev'd
At th' wound that Cerdon had receiv'd,
Ran to relieve him with his lore,
And cure the hurt he made before.

¹ Thus Virgil and Homer:
Hesperiam metire jacens. Æn. xii. 360.
Istic nunc, metuende, jace. Æn. x. 557.
¹Εφανθοὶ νῦν κεῖσο, II. Φ. 122.

² This is a banter upon some of the speeches in Homer.
Meanwhile the Knight had wheel'd about, 700
To breathe himself, and next find out
Th' advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruffled foe infest.
This being resolv'd, he spurr'd his steed,
To run at Orsin with full speed,
While he was busy in the care
Of Cerdon's wound, and unaware:
But he was quick, and had already
Unto the part apply'd remedy;
And seeing th' enemy prepar'd,
Drew up, and stood upon his guard:
Then, like a warrior, right expert
And skilful in the martial art,
The subtle Knight straight made a halt,
And judg'd it best to stay th' assault,
Until he had reliev'd the Squire,
And then, in order, to retire;
Or, as occasion should invite,
With forces join'd renew the fight.
Ralpho, by this time disentranc'd,
Upon his bum himself advanc'd,
Though sorely bruis'd; his limbs all o'er,
With ruthless bangs were stiff and sore;
Right fain he would have got upon
His feet again, to get him gone;
When Hudibras to aid him came.
Quoth he, and call'd him by his name,
Courage, the day at length is ours,
And we once more as conquerors,
Have both the field and honour won,
The foe is profligate, and run;
I mean all such as can, for some
This hand hath sent to their long home;
And some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gash and bloody wound.
Caesar himself could never say,
He got two vict'ries in a day,
As I have done, that can say, twice I,
In one day, veni, vidi, vici.¹
The foe's so numerous, that we Cannot so often vincere,²
And they perire, and yet enow
Be left to strike an after-blown.
Then, lest they rally, and once more
Put us to fight the bus'ness o'er,
Get up, and mount thy steed; dispatch,
And let us both their motions watch.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action, now be here;
Nor have I turn'd my back, or hang'd
And arse, for fear of being bang'd.
It was for you I got these harms,
Advent'ring to fetch off your arms.
The blows and drubs I have receiv'd
Have bruised my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength: unless you stoop,
And reach your hand to pull me up,
I shall lie here, and be a prey
To those who now are run away.

That thou shalt not, quoth Hudibras:
We read, the ancients held it was
More honourable far servare
Civem, than slay an adversary;
The one we oft' to-day have done,
The other shall dispatch anon:

¹ The favourite terms by which Cæsar described his victory over Pharnaces. In his consequent triumph at Rome, these words, (translated thus into English, I came, I saw, I overcame) were painted on a tablet and carried before him. See Plutarch's life of Julius Cæsar.
² A great general, being informed that his enemies were very numerous, replied, then there are enough to be killed, enough to be taken prisoners, and enough to run away.
And tho' th'art of a dif'trent church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch.¹
This said, he jogg'd his good steed nigher,
And steer'd him gently toward the Squire;
Then bowing down his body, stretch'd
His hand out, and at Ralphe reach'd;
When Trulla, whom he did not mind,
Charg'd him like lightning behind.
She had been long in search about
Magnano's wound, to find it out;
But could find none, nor where the shot
That had so startled him was got:
But having found the worst was past,
She fell to her own work at last,
The pillage of the prisoners,
Which in all feats of arms was hers:
And now to plunder Ralph she flew,
When Hudibras his hard fate drew
To succour him; for, as he bow'd
To help him up, she laid a load
Of blows so heavy, and plac'd so well,
On th'other side, that down he fell.
Yield, scoundrel base, quoth she, or die,
Thy life is mine, and liberty:
But if thou think'st I took thee tardy,
And dar'st presume to be so hardy,
To try thy fortune o'er afresh,
I'll wave my title to thy flesh,
Thy arms and baggage, now my right:
And if thou hast the heart to try't,
I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,²
And once more, for that carcase vile,

¹ This is a sneer at the independents, who, when they had gotten possession of the government, deserted their old allies, the presbyterians, and treated them with great hauteur.
² Charles XII. king of Sweden, having taken a town from the duke of Saxony, then king of Poland, the duke intimated that there must have Fight upon tick. — Quoth Hudibras,
Thou offer'st nobly, valiant lass,
And I shall take thee at thy word.
First let me rise, and take my sword;
That sword, which has so oft this day
Through squadrons of my foes made way,
And some to other worlds dispatch'd,
Now with a feeble spinster match'd,
Will blush with blood ignoble stain'd,
By which no honour's to be gain'd.¹
But if thou'lt take m' advice in this,
Consider, while thou may'st, what 'tis
To interrupt a victor's course,
B' opposing such a trivial force.
For if with conquest I come off,
And that I shall do sure enough,
Quarter thou canst not have, nor grace,
By law of arms, in such a case;
Both which I now do offer freely.
I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly,
Clapping her hand upon her breech,
To shew how much she priz'd his speech,
Quarter or counsel from a foe:
If thou canst force me to it, do.
But lest it should again be said,
When I have once more won thy head,
I took thee napping, unprepar'd,
Arm, and betake thee to thy guard.
This said, she to her tackle fell,
And on the Knight let fall a peal
Of blows so fierce, and prest so home,
That he retir'd, and follow'd's bum.

¹ Nullum memorabile nomen
Fœmineâ in pœnâ est, nce habet victoria laudem.
Virg. Æneid. ii. 584.
Stand to't, quoth she, or yield to mercy,
It is not fighting arsie-versie
Shall serve thy turn. — This stirr'd his spleen
More than the danger he was in,
The blows he felt, or was to feel,
Although th' already made him reel.
Honour, despight, revenge, and shame,
At once into his stomach came;
Which fir'd it so, he rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick.
But she upon her truncheon took them,
And by oblique diversion broke them;
Waiting an opportunity
To pay all back with usury,
Which long she fail'd not of; for now
The Knight, with one dead-doing blow,
Resolving to decide the fight,
And she with quick and cunning slight
Avoiding it, the force and weight
He charg'd upon it was so great,
As almost sway'd him to the ground:
No sooner she th' advantage found,
But in she flew; and seconding,
With home-made thrust, the heavy swing,
She laid him flat upon his side,
And mounting on his trunk astride,
Quoth she, I told thee what would come
Of all thy vapouring, base scum.
Say, will the law of arms allow
I may have grace, and quarter now?

1 That is, ἀστερον πρότερον, wrong end foremost, bottom upward: but it originally signified avertre ignem, Tuscorum lingua, Arseaver, verse ignem constat appellari: unde, Afranius ait, inscribat aliquis in ostio arse verse. S. Pompeius Festus de verborum significatione, p. 18.
Or wilt thou rather break thy word,
And stain thine honour, than thy sword?
A man of war to damn his soul,
In basely breaking his parole.
And when before the fight, th’hadst vow’d
To give no quarter in cold blood;
Now thou hast got me for a Tartar,¹
To make ’m against my will take quarter;
Why dost not put me to the sword,
But cowardly fly from thy word?

Quoth Hudibras, The day’s thine own;
Thou and thy stars have cast me down:
My laurels are transplanted now,
And flourish on thy conqu’ring brow:
My loss of honour’s great enough,
Thou needst not brand it with a scoff:
Sarcasms may eclipse thine own,
But cannot blur my lost renown:

¹ The Tartars had much rather die in battle than take quarter. Hence the proverb, Thou hast caught a Tartar.—A man catches a Tartar when he falls into his own trap, or having a design upon another, is caught himself.

Help, help, cries one, I have caught a Tartar. Bring him along, answers his comrade. He will not come, says he. Then come without him, quoth the other. But he will not let me, says the Tartar-catcher.

I have somewhere read the following lines:

Seres inter nationemque Tartaram
Flagratab bellum, fortiter vero prælians
Ter ipse manu propriâ Tartarum occupans.
Extemplo exclamat—Tartarum præhendi manu;
Veniat ad me, Dux inquit exercitus,
At se venire velle Tartarus negat:
At te cum ducas illico—sed non vult sequi,
Tu solus venias—Vellem, sed non me sinit.

Plautus has an expression not much unlike this, — potitus est hostium, to signify he was taken prisoner—Mr. Peck, see New Memoirs of Milton’s Life, p. 237, explains it in a different manner. “Bajazet,” says he, “was taken prisoner by Tamerlane, who, when he first saw him, generously asked, ‘Now, sir, if you had taken me prisoner, as I have ‘you, tell me, I pray, what you would have done with me’? ‘If I ‘had taken you prisoner,’ said the foolish Turk, ‘I would have thrust ‘you under the table when I did eat, to gather up the crumbs with ‘the dogs; when I rode out, I would have made your neck a horsing-
I am not now in fortune's power,
He that is down can fall no lower. 1
The ancient heroes were illust'rous
For being benign, and not blust'rous
Against a vanquish'd foe: their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words;
And did in fight but cut work out
T' employ their courtesies about. 2

Quoth she, Altho' thou hast deserv'd,
Base Slubberdegullion, 3 to be serv'd
As thou didst vow to deal with me,
If thou hadst got the victory;
Yet I should rather act a part
That suits my fame, than thy desert.
Thy arms, thy liberty, beside
All that's on th' outside of thy hide,
Are mine by military law, 4
Of which I will not bate one straw;

"' block; and when I travelled, you also should have been carried
' along with me in an iron cage, for every fool to hoot and shout at.'
' I thought to have used you better,' said the gallant Tamerlane; 'but ' since you intended to have served me thus, you have' (caught a 'Tartar, for hence I reckon came that proverb), 'justly pronounced
' your doom.'"

1 Qui decumbit humi, non habet unde cadat.
2 See Cleveland, p. 144. in his letter to the Protector. "The most 'renowned heroes have ever with such tenderness cherished their cap-
'tives, that their swords did but cut out work for their courtesies."
Thus Ovid:

Quo quis enim major, magis est placabilis iæ
Et faciles motus mens generaosa capit.

And again the same:

Corpora magnanimo satis est prostrasse leoni
Pugna suum finem, cum jacet hostis, habet.

Ovid. Trist. lib. iii.

3 That is, a drivelling fool: to slubber or slabber, in British, is to drivell; in the Teutonic, it signifies to slip or slide, and so metaphorically to do a thing ill or faultily, or negligently; and gul, or gullion, the diminutive, a fool, or person easily imposed upon.
4 In public duels all horses, pieces of broken armour, or other furniture that fell to the ground, after the combatants entered the lists, were the fees of the marshal.
The rest, thy life and limbs, once more,
Though doubly forfeit, I restore.
Quoth Hudibras, It is too late
For me to treat or stipulate;
What thou command'st I must obey;
Yet those whom I expugn'd to-day,
Of thine own party, I let go,
And gave them life and freedom too,
Both dogs and bear, upon their parol,
Whom I took pris'ners in this quarrel.
Quoth Trulla, Whether thou or they
Let one another run away,
Concerns not me; but was't not thou
That gave Crowdero quarter too?
Crowdero, whom in irons bound,
Thou basely threw'st into Lob's pound,¹
Where still he lies, and with regret
His generous bowels rage and fret:
But now thy carcass shall redeem,
And serve to be exchang'd for him.

This said, the Knight did straight submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrob'd his gaberdine,
And with it did himself resign.

¹ A vulgar expression for any place of confinement, particularly the stocks. — Dr. Grey mentions a story of Mr. Lob, a preacher among the dissenters. When their meetings were prohibited, he contrived a trap-door in his pulpit, which led, through many dark windings, into a cellar. His adversaries once pursued him into these recesses, and, groping about, said to one another, that they were got into Lob's pound.

This gentleman, or one of the same name and calling, is mentioned by Mr. Prior, in his epistle to Fleetwood Shephard, esquire:

So at pure barn of loud non-con,
Where with my granam I have gone,
When Lobb had sifted all his text,
And I well hop'd the pudding next,
"Now to apply," has plagu'd me more
Than all his villain cant before.

[Massinger has the phrase, (Duke of Milan, A. iii. sc. 2.) but not in the sense of a place of, at least permanent, confinement.]
She took it, and forthwith divesting
The mantle that she wore, said, jesting,
Take that, and wear it for my sake;
Then threw it o'er his sturdy back:
And as the French, we conquer'd once,
Now give us laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Port-cannons, perriwigs, and feathers,\(^1\)

\(^1\) Our successful battles in France have always been mentioned with pleasure; and we seem at no time to have been averse to the French fashions. Pantaloons were a kind of loose breeches, commonly made of silk, and puffed, which covered the legs, thighs, and part of the body. They are represented in some of Vandyke's pictures, and may be seen in the harlequin entertainments. — Port-cannons, were ornaments about the knees of the breeches; they were grown to such excess in France, that Molière was thought to have done good service, by laughing them out of fashion. Mr. Butler, in his Genuine Remains, vol. ii. p. 83, says of the huffing courtier, he walks in his Port-cannons like one that stalks in long grass. In his Genuine Remains, our poet often derides the violent imitation of French fashions. In the second volume is a satire entirely on this subject, which was a very proper object of ridicule, as after the Restoration, not only the politics of the court led to it, but, likewise, an earnest desire among the old cavaliers of avoiding the formal and precise gravity of the times immediately preceding. In the Pindaric Ode to the memory of Du Val, a poem allowed to be written by our author:

In France, the staple of new modes,
Where garbs and miens are current goods,
That serves the ruder northern nations,
With methods of address and treat,
Prescribes new garnitures and fashions,
And how to drink, and how to eat,
No out of fashion wine or meat;
Conform their palates to the mode,
And relish that, and not the food;
And, rather than transgress the rule,
Eat kitchen-stuff, and stinking fowl;
For that which we call stinking here,
Is but piquant, and haut-gout, there.

Perriwigs were brought from France about the latter end of the reign of James the first, but not much in use 'till after the Restoration. At first they were of an immense size in large flowing curls, as we see them in eternal buckles in Westminster Abbey, and on other monuments. Lord Bolingbroke is said to be the first who tied them up in knots, as the counsellors wore them some time ago: this was esteemed so great an undress, that when his lordship first went to court in a wig of this fashion queen Anne was offended, and said to those about her, "this man will come to me next court-day in his night-cap."
Just so the proud, insulting lass
Array’d and dighted Hudibras.

Meanwhile the other champions, yerst
In hurry of the fight disperst,
Arriv’d, when Trulla’d won the day,
To share in th’ honour and the prey,
And out of Hudibras his hide,
With vengeance to be satisfy’d;
Which now they were about to pour
Upon him in a wooden show’r:
But Trulla thrust herself between,
And striding o’er his back agen,
She brandish’d o’er her head his sword,
And vow’d they should not break her word;
Sh’ had given him quarter, and her blood,
Or theirs, should make that quarter good.
For she was bound, by law of arms,
To see him safe from further harms.
In dungeon deep Crowdero cast
By Hudibras, as yet lay fast,
Where to the hard and ruthless stones,
His great heart made perpetual moans;
Him she resolv’d that Hudibras
Should ransom, and supply his place.
This stopp’d their fury, and the basting
Which toward Hudibras was hasting.
They thought it was but just and right,
That what she had achiev’d in fight,
She should dispose of how she pleas’d;
Crowdero ought to be releas’d:
Nor could that any way be done
So well, as this she pitch’d upon:

1 Dighted, from the Anglo-Saxon word digitan, to dress, fit out, polish.
2 Erst, adverb, superlative degree, i.e. first, from er, before.
3 Thus Virgil:

Montibus et silvis studio jactabat inani.
For who a better could imagine?
This therefore they resolv'd t' engage in.
The Knight and Squire first they made
Rise from the ground where they were laid,
Then mounted both upon their horses,
But with their faces to the arses.
Orsin led Hudibras's beast,
And Talgol that which Ralpho prest;
Whom stout Magnano, valiant Cerdon,
And Colon, waited as a guard on;
All ush'ring Trulla, in the rear,
With th' arms of either prisoner.
In this proud order and array,
They put themselves upon their way,
Striving to reach th' enchanted Castle,
Where stout Crowdero in durance lay still.
Thither with greater speed than shows,
And triumph over conquer'd foes,
Do use t' allow; or than the bears,
Or pageants borne before lord-mayors, 1
Are wont to use, they soon arriv'd,
In order, soldier-like contriv'd:
Still marching in a warlike posture,
As fit for battle as for muster.
The Knight and Squire they first unhorse,
And, bending 'gainst the fort their force,
They all advance'd, and round about
Begirt the magical redoubt.
Magnan' led up in this adventure,
And made way for the rest to enter:
For he was skilful in black art,
No less than he that built the fort, 2

---

1 I believe at the lordmayor's show, bears were led in procession, and afterwards baited for the diversion of the populace.
The procession of the mob to the stocks is compared to three things: a Roman triumph, a lord-mayor's show, and leading bears about the streets.
2 Magnano is before described as a blacksmith, or tinker. See Canto ii. I. 336.
And with an iron mace laid flat
A breach, which straight all enter'd at,
And in the wooden dungeon found
Crowdero laid upon the ground:
Him they release from durance base,
Restor'd t' his fiddle and his case,
And liberty, his thirsty rage
With luscious veng'ance to assuage;
For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge,
And in the self-same limbo put
The Knight and Squire, where he was shut;
Where leaving them i' th' wretched hole, 1
Their bangs and durance to condole,
Confin'd and conjur'd into narrow
Enchanted mansion, to know sorrow,
In the same order and array
Which they advanc'd, they march'd away:
But Hudibras, who scorn'd to stoop
To fortune, or be said to droop,
Cheer'd up himself with ends of verse,
And sayings of philosophers.
  Quoth he, Th' one half of man, his mind,
Is, sui juris, unconfin'd, 2
And cannot be laid by the heels,
What e'er the other moiety feels.
'Tis not restraint, or liberty, 3
That makes men prisoners or free;

1 In the edition of 1704 it is printed in Hockley hole, meaning, by a low pun, the place where their hocks or ankles, were confin'd. Hockley Hole, or Hockley i' th' Hole, was the name of a place resorted to for vulgar diversions.
2 Our author here shews his learning, by bantering the stoic philosophy; and his wit, by comparing Alexander the Great with Diogenes.
3 Quisnain igitur liber? sapient, sibi qui imperiosus;
Quem neque pauperies, neque mors, neque vincula terrent:
Responsare cupidinibus, contemnere honores
Fortis; et in seipso totus teres atque rotundus,
But perturbations that possess
The mind, or equanimities.
The whole world was not half so wide
To Alexander, when he cry'd,
Because he had but one to subdue, 1
As was a paltry narrow tub to Diogenes: who is not said, 2
For ought that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye, and sob,
Because h' had n' e'er another tub.
The ancients make two sev'ral kinds
Of prowess in heroic minds,
The active and the passive valiant,
Both which are pari libra gallant;
For both to give blows, and to carry,
In fights are equi-necessary:
But in defeats, the passive stout
Are always found to stand it out
Most desp'rately, and to out-do
The active, 'gainst a conqu'ring foe:
Tho' we with blacks and blues are suggil'd, 3
Or, as the vulgar say, are cudgel'd;

Externi ne quid valeat per laeve morari;
In quem manca ruit semper fortuna.
Horat. lib. ii. Sat. vii. 83.
Κακός ἐσμός, σώματος μὲν τύχη, ψυχής 'εντεκά τὸ σῶμα λευμένος, τὴν ἐν ψυχῆν ἐεεμένος, οὖν ὅ ὅ' αὐ τὸ σῶμα ἐέεμένος, τὴν ἐν ψυχῆν λευμένος, ἐλεύθερος.
Unus Pellæo juveni non sufficit orbis:
Æstuat infelix angusto limite mundi.
Juven. Sat. x. 168.

—Dolia nudi
Non ardent Cynici: si frégeris, altera fiet
Cras domus, aut eadem plumbó commissa manebit.
Sensit Alexander, testa cum vidit in illa
Magnum habitatorem, quinto felicior hic, qui
Nil cuperet, quam qui totum sibi posceret orbem,
Passurus gestis æquanda pericula rebus.
Juven. Sat. xiv. 308.

1 From suggillo, to beat black and blue.
He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb’d, can lose no honour by’t.
Honour’s a lease for lives to come,
And cannot be extended from
The legal tenant: ’tis a chattel
Not to be forfeited in battel.
If he that in the field is slain,
Be in the bed of honour lain,
He that is beaten may be said
To lie in honour’s truckle-bed.
For as we see th’ eclipsed sun
By mortals is more gaz’d upon
Than when, adorn’d with all his light,
He shines in serene sky most bright;
So valour, in a low estate,
Is most admir’d and wonder’d at.

Quoth Ralph, How great I do not know
We may, by being beaten, grow;
But none that see how here we sit,
Will judge us overgrown with wit.
As gifted brethren, preaching by
A carnal hour-glass, do imply
Illumination, can convey
Into them what they have to say,
But not how much; so well enough
Know you to charge, but not draw off.

1 Vivit post funera virtus.
2 A man cannot be deprived of his honour, or forfeit it to the conqueror, as he does his arms and accoutrements.
3 ‘‘The bed of honour,’’ says Farquhar, is a mighty large bed. Ten thousand people may lie in it together, and never feel one another.’’
4 The truckle-bed is a small bed upon wheels, which goes under the larger one.
5 This preaching by the hour gave room for many jokes. A punning preacher, having talked a full hour, turned his hour-glass, and said: Come, my friends, let us take the other glass. The frames for these hour-glasses remained in many churches till very lately.
For who, without a cap and bauble, 1
Having subdued a bear and rabble,
And might with honour have come off,
Would put it to a second proof:
A politic exploit, right fit
For Presbyterian zeal and wit. 2

Quoth Hudibras, That cuckoo's tone,
Ralpho thou always harp'st upon;
When thou at any thing would'st rail,
Thou mak'st presbytery thy scale
To take the height on't, and explain
To what degree it is profane:
What s'ever will not with thy — what d'ye call
Thy light—jump right, thou call'st synodical. 1080
As if presbytery were a standard
To size what s'ever's to be slander'd.
Dost not remember how this day
Thou to my beard was bold to say,
That thou could'st prove bear-baiting equal
With synods, orthodox and legal?
Do, if thou can'st, for I deny't,
And dare thee to't with all thy light. 3

Quoth Ralpho, Truly that is no
Hard matter for a man to do,
That has but any guts in's brains, 4
And could believe it worth his pains;

---

1 Who but a fool or child, one who deserves a fool's cap, or a child's play-thing.
2 Ralpho, being chagrined by his situation, not only blames the misconduct of the knight, which had brought them into the scrape, but sneers at him for his religious principles. The independents, at one time, were as inveterate against the Presbyterians, as both of them were against the church. For an explanation of some following verses, see the note on canto i. 457.
3 The independents were great pretenders to the light of the spirit. They supposed that all their actions, as well as their prayers and preachings, were immediately directed by it.
4 A proverbial expression for one who has some share of common sense.
But since you dare and urge me to it,
You'll find I've light enough to do it.

Synods are mystical bear-gardens,
Where elders, deputys, church-wardens,
And other members of the court,
Manage the Babylonish sport.
For prolocutor, scribe, and bearward,
Do differ only in a mere word.
Both are but sev'ral synagogues
Of carnal men, and bears, and dogs:
Both antichristian assemblies,
To mischief bent, as far's in them lies:
Both stave and tail with fierce contests,
The one with men, the other beasts.
The diff'rence is, the one fights with
The tongue, the other with the teeth;
And that they bait but bears in this,
In th' other souls and consciences;
Where saints themselves are brought to stake
For gospel-light, and conscience-sake;
Expos'd to scribes and presbyters,
Instead of mastiff dogs and curs;
Than whom th' have less humanity,
For these at souls of men will fly.
This to the prophet did appear,
Who in a vision saw a bear,
Prefiguring the beastly rage
Of church-rule, in this latter age:

---

1 The presbyterians, when in power, by means of their synods, assemblies, classes, scribes, presbyters, triers, orders, censures, curses, &c. &c. persecuted the ministers, both of the independents and of the church of England, with violence and cruelty little short of the inquisition. Sir Roger L'Estrange mentions some strong instances of their persecuting tenets.
2 Daniel vii. 5. "And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear; and it raised up itself on one side; and it had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it; and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh."
HENRY BURTON.
As is demonstrated at full
By him that baited the pope’s bull.¹
Bears naturally are beasts of prey,
That live by rapine; so do they.
What are their orders, constitutions,
Church-censures, curses, absolutions,
But sev’ral mystic chains they make,
To tie poor christians to the stake?
And then set heathen officers,
Instead of dogs, about their ears.²
For to prohibit and dispense,
To find out, or to make offence;
Of hell and heav’n to dispose,
To play with souls at fast and loose;
To set what characters they please,
And mulcts on sin or godliness;
Reduce the church to gospel-order,
By rapine, sacrilege, and murder;
To make presbytery supreme,
And kings themselves submit to them;³
And force all people, tho’ against
Their consciences, to turn saints;
Must prove a pretty thriving trade,
When saints monopolists are made:
When pious frauds, and holy shifts,
Are dispensations, and gifts;

¹ The baiting of the pope’s bull was the title of a pamphlet written by Henry Burton, rector of St. Matthew, Friday-street, and printed at London in 1627.
² Tacitus says of the persecutions under Nero, pereuntibus addita ludibria, ut ferarum tergis contecti, laniatu canum interirent. Annal xv. 44.
³ The disciplinarians, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, maintained that kings ought to be subject to ecclesiastical censures, as well as other persons. This doctrine was revived by the presbyterians afterwards, and actually put in practice by the Scots, in their treatment of Charles II. while he continued among them. The presbyterians, in the civil war, maintained that princes must submit their sceptres, and throw down their crowns before the church, yea, to lick up the dust of the feet of the church.
There godliness becomes mere ware,
And ev'ry synod but a fair.

Synods are whelps o' th' Inquisition,
A mungrel breed of like pernicios,\(^1\)
And growing up, became the sires
Of scribes, commissioners, and triers;\(^2\)
Whose hus'ness is, by cunning slight,
To cast a figure for men's light;
To find, in lines of beard and face,
The physiognomy of grace;\(^3\)
And by the sound and twang of nose,
If all be sound within disclose,
Free from a crack, or flaw of sinning,
As men try pipkins by the ringing;\(^4\)

---

\(^1\) The word pernicios, perhaps, is coined by our author: he means of like destructive effect, from the Latin pernicies, though it is used elsewhere.

\(^2\) The presbyterians had a set of officers called the triers, who examined the candidates for orders, and the presentees to benefices, and sifted the qualifications of lay elders. See the preface to Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy. As the presbyterians demanded of the church of England, What command, or example, have you for kneeling at the communion, for wearing a surplice, for lord bishops, for a penned liturgy, &c. &c. so the independents retorted upon them; Where are your lay elders, your presbyters, your classes, your synods, to be found in Scripture? where your steeple houses, and your national church, or your tithes, or your metre psalms, or your two sacraments? shew us a command or example for them. Dr. Hammond's View of the Directory.

\(^3\) The triers pretended to great skill in these matters. If they disliked the face or beard of a man, if he happened to be of a ruddy complexion, or cheerful countenance, they would reject him on these accounts. The precise and puritanical faces of those days may be observed in the prints of the most eminent dissenters.

The modern reader may be inclined to think the dispute between the knight and the squire rather too long. But if he considers that the great object of the poem was to expose to scorn and contempt those sectaries, and those pretenders to extraordinary sanctity, who had overturned the constitution in church and state; and, beside that, such enthusiasts were then frequently to be met with; he will not wonder that the author indulges himself in this fine train of wit and humour.

\(^4\) They judged of man's inward grace by his outward complexion, Dr. Echard says, "If a man had but a little blood in his cheeks, his condition was accounted very dangerous, and it was almost an infallible sign of reprobation: and I will assure you," says he, "a very honest man, of a very sanguine complexion, if he chance to come by
By black caps, underlaid with white,¹
Give certain guess at inward light;
Which serjeants at the gospel wear,²
To make the sp’ritual calling clear.
The handkerchief about the neck,
— Canonical cravat of smeck;³
From whom the institution came,
When church and state they set on flame,
And worn by them as badges then
Of spiritual warfaring-men,—
Judge rightly if regeneration
Be of the newest cut in fashion:

"an officious zealot’s house, might be put in the stocks only for looking " fresh in a frosty morning."
— pulsa, dignoscere cautas
Quid solidum crepet, et pictæ tectoria linguæ.
Persius, Sat. v. 24.

¹ Many persons, particularly the dissenters, in our poet’s time, were fond of wearing black caps lined with white. See the print of Baxter, and others. These caps, however, were not peculiar to the protestant sectaries, nor always of a black colour; master Drurie, a jesuit, who, with a hundred of his auditors, lost his life, October 26, 1623, by the sinking of the garret floor, where he was preaching, is thus described: "When " he had read (his text) he sat down in the chaire, and put upon his " head a red quilt cap, having a linnen white one under it, turned up " about the brims, and so undertooke his text." — The doleful Evensong, by Thomas Good, 4to. This continued a fashion for many years after.
² The coif, or black worn on the head, is the badge of a serjeant at law.
³ A club or junto, which wrote several books against the king, consisting of five eminent holders-forth, namely: Stephen Marshall, Edmund Calamy, Thomas Young, Matthew Newcomen, and William Spurstow; the initials of their names make the word Smectymnuus:
and, by way of distinction, they wore handkerchiefs about their necks, which afterwards degenerated into carnal cravats. Hall, bishop of Exeter, presented an humble remonstrance to the high court of parliament, in behalf of liturgy and episcopacy; which was answered by the junto under this title, The Original of Liturgy and Episcopacy discussed by Smectymnuus; John Milton is supposed to have been concerned in writing it. — For an account of Thomas Young, see Warton’s notes on Milton. — The five counsellors of Charles II. in the year 1670, Clifford, Arlington, Buckingham, Ashley, Lauderdale, were called the Cabal, from the initials of their names.— Mr. Mark Noble, in his Memoirs of the Cromwell Family, says, "When Oliver resided at St. Ives, he usually " went to church with a piece of red flannel about his neck, as he was " subject to an inflammation in his throat.” p. 105. note.
Sure 'tis an orthodox opinion,
That grace is founded in dominion.¹
Great piety consists in pride;
To rule is to be sanctify'd:
To domineer, and to controul,
Both o'er the body and the soul,
Is the most perfect discipline
Of church-rule, and by right divine.
Bell and the Dragon's chaplains were,' ¹²
More moderate than those by far:
For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;
But these will not be fob'd off so,
They must have wealth and power too;
Or else, with blood and desolation,
They'll tear it out o' th' heart o' th' nation.
Sure these themselves from primitive
And heathen priesthood do derive,
When butchers were the only clerks,³
Elders and presbyters of kirks;
Whose directory was to kill;
And some believe it is so still.⁴
The only diff'rence is, that then
They slaughter'd only beasts, now men.
For them to sacrifice a bullock,
Or, now and then, a child to Moloch,
They count a vile abomination,
But not to slaughter a whole nation.

¹ The presbyterians had such an esteem for power, that they thought those who obtained it shewed a mark of grace; and that those only who had grace were entitled to power.
² The priests, their wives, and children, feasted upon the provisions offered to the idol, and pretended that he had devoured them. See the Apocrypha.
³ Both in the heathen and Jewish sacrifices, the animal was frequently slain by the priests.
⁴ A banter on the directory, or form of service drawn up by the presbyterians, and substituted for the common prayer.
Presbytery does but translate
The papacy to a free state,
A common-wealth of popery,
Where ev’ry village is a see
As well as Rome, and must maintain
A tithe-pig metropolitan;
Where ev’ry presbyter, and deacon,
Commands the keys for cheese and bacon;¹
And ev’ry hamlet’s governed
By’s holiness, the church’s head,²
More haughty and severe in’s place
Than Gregory and Boniface.³
Such church must, surely, be a monster
With many heads: for if we conter
What in th’ Apocalypse we find,
According to th’ Apostle’s mind,

¹ Daniel Burgess, dining with a gentlewoman of his congregation and a large uncut Cheshire cheese being brought to table, he asked where he should cut it. She replied, Where you please, Mr. Burgess. Upon which he ordered his servant to carry it to his own house, for he would cut it at home.
² The gentlemen of Cheshire sent a remonstrance to the parliament, wherein they complained, that, instead of having twenty-six bishops, they were then governed by a numerous presbytery, amounting, with lay elders and others, to 40,000. This government, say they, is purely papal, for every minister exercises papal jurisdiction. Dr. Grey quotes from sir John Birkenhead revived:
   But never look for health nor peace
   If once presbytery jade us,
   When every priest becomes a pope,
   When tinkers and sow-gelders,
   May, if they can but ’scape the rope,
   Be princes and lay-elders.
³ The former was consecrated in the year 1073, the latter elected in 1294. Two most insolent and assuming popes, who wanted to raise the tiara above all the crowned heads in christendom. Gregory the seventh, commonly called Hildebrand, was the first who arrogated to himself the authority to excommunicate and depose the emperor. Boniface the third, was he who assumed the title of universal bishop. Boniface the eighth, at the jubilee instituted by himself, appeared one day in the habit of a pope, and the next day in that of an emperor. He caused two swords to be carried before him, to shew that he was invested with all power ecclesiastical and temporal.
'Tis that the Whore of Babylon,
With many heads did ride upon;¹
Which heads denote the sinful tribe
Of deacon, priest, lay-elder, scribe.

Lay-elder, Simeon to Levi,²
Whose little finger is as heavy
As loins of patriarchs, prince-pretate,
And bishop-secular.³ This zealot
Is of a mungrel, diverse kind,
Cleric before, and lay behind;⁴
A lawless linsey-woolsey brother,⁵
Half of one order, half another;
A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beast, a fish in water;
That always preys on grace, or sin;
A sheep without, a wolf within.

¹ The Church of Rome has often been compared to the whore of Babylon, mentioned in the seventeenth chapter of the Revelations. The beast, which the whore rode upon, is here said to signify the presbyterian establishment: and the seven, or many heads of the beast, are interpreted, by the poet, to mean their several officers, deacons, priests, scribes, lay-elders, &c.

² That is, lay-elder, an associate to the priesthood, for interested, if not for iniquitous purposes; alluding to Genesis xlix. 5. 6. "Simeon " and Levi are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitations: O, my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honour, be not thou united; for in their anger they slew " a man." Mr. Robert Gordon, in his History of the illustrious family of Gordon, vol. ii. p. 197, compares the solemn league and covenant with the holy league in France: he says they were as like as one egg to another, the one was nursed by the jesuits, the other by the Scots presbyterians, Simeon and Levi. See Doughtie's Velitationes Polemicae, p. 74.

³ Such is the bishop and Prince of Liege, and such are several of the bishops in Germany. [1793.]

⁴ A trilling book called a Key to Hudibras, under the name of sir Roger L'Estrange, pretends to decipher all the characters in the poem, and tells us, that one Andrew Crawford was here intended. This character is supposed by others to have been designed for William Dunning, a Scotch presbyter. But, probably, the author meant no more than to give a general representation of the lay-elders.

⁵ Lawless, because it was forbidden by the Levitical law to wear a mixture of linen and woollen in the same garment.
This fierce inquisitor has chief
Dominion over men’s belief
And manners; can pronounce a saint
Idolatrous, or ignorant,
When superciliously he sifts,
Through coarsest boulter, others gifts.¹
For all men live, and judge amiss,
Whose talents jump not just with his.
He’ll lay on gifts with hand, and place
On dullest noodle light and grace,
The manufacture of the kirk,
Whose pastors are but th’ handiwork
Of his mechanic paws, instilling
Divinity in them by feeling.
From whence they start up chosen vessels,
Made by contact, as men get measles.
So cardinals, they say, do grope
At th’ other end the new made pope.²

Hold, hold, quoth Hudibras, soft fire,
They say, does make sweet malt. Good Squire,
Festina lente, not too fast;
For haste, the proverb says, makes waste.
The quirks and cavils thou dost make
Are false, and built upon mistake:
And I shall bring you, with your pack
Of fallacies, t’ Elenchi back;³

¹ A bolter is the sieve by which the millers dress their flour.
² See, in Platina’s Lives of the Popes, the well known story of pope
Joan, or John VIII. The stercorary chair, as appears by Burchard’s
Diary, was used at the installations of Innocent VIII. and Sixtus IV.
See Breguigny in account of MSS. in the French king’s library, 8vo. 1789.
³ Elenchi are arguments which deceive under an appearance of truth.
The knight says he shall make the deception apparent. The name is given, by Aristotle, to those syllogisms which have seemingly a fair, but in reality a contradictory conclusion. A chief design of Aristotle’s logic is to establish rules for the trial of arguments, and to guard against sophism: for in his time Zeno, Parmenides, and others, had set up a false method of reasoning, which he makes it his business to detect and defeat.
And put your arguments in mood
And figure to be understood.
1260
I'll force you by right ratiocination¹
To leave your vitilitigation.²
And make you keep to the question close,
And argue dialectic القدم.³

The question then, to state it first,
Is, which is better, or which worst,
Synods or bears. Bears I avow
To be the worst, and synods thou.
But, to make good th' assertion,
Thou say'st th' are really all one.
1270
If so, not worst; for if th' are idem,
Why then, tantundem dat tantidem.
For if they are the same, by course
Neither is better, neither worse.
But I deny they are the same,
More than a maggot and I am.
1275
That both are animalia,⁴
I grant, but not rationalia:
For though they do agree in kind,
Specific difference we find;⁵

¹ The poet makes tio, in ratiocination, constitute but one syllable, as in verse 1378, but in P. i. c. i. v. 78, he makes tio two syllables.
² That is, your perverse humour of wrangling. Erasmus, in the Moriae encomium, has the following passage: "Etenim non deerrunt for-" tasse vitilitigatores, qui calumniuntur partim leviiores esse nugas quam "ut theologum decendant, partim mordaciores quam ut Christianæ con-" veniant modestiae." Vitilitigatores, i.e. obrectatores et calumniatores, quos Cato, novato verbo, a vitio et morbo litigiandi vitilitigatores appellabat, ut testatur Plin, in praefat. historiæ mundi.
³ That is, logically.
⁴ Suppose we read:
That both indeed are animalia.
⁵ Between animate and inanimate things, as between a man and a tree, there is a generical difference; that is, they are not of the same kind or genus. Between rational and sensitive creatures, as a man and a bear, there is a specifical difference; for though they agree in the genus of animals, or living creatures, yet they differ in the species as to reason. Between two men, Plato and Socrates, there is a numerical difference; for, though they are of the same species as rational creatures, yet they are not one and the same, but two men. See Part ii. Canto i. l. 150.
And can no more make bears of these,
Than prove my horse is Socrates.¹
That synods are bear-gardens too,
Thou dost affirm; but I say, No:
And thus I prove it, in a word,
What s'ever assembly's not impow'r'd
To censure, curse, absolve, and ordain,
Can be no synod: but Bear-garden
Has no such pow'r, ergo 'tis none;
And so thy sophistry's o'erthrown.

But yet we are beside the question
Which thou didst raise the first contest on:
For that was, Whether bears are better
Than synod-men? I say, Negatur.
That bears are beasts, and synods men,
Is held by all: they're better then,
For bears and dogs on four legs go,
As beasts; but synod-men on two.
'Tis true, they all have teeth and nails;
But prove that synod-men have tails:
Or that a rugged, shaggy fur
Grows o'er the hide of presbyter;
Or that his snout and spacious ears
Do hold proportion with a bear's.
A bear's a savage beast, of all
Most ugly and unnatural,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lickt it into shape and frame:²

¹ Or that my horse is a man. Aristotle, in his disputations, uses the word Socrates as an appellative for man in general. From thence it was taken up in the schools.

² We must not expect our poet's philosophy to be strictly true; it is sufficient that it agree with the notions commonly handed down. Thus Ovid:

Nec catulus partu, quem reddidit ursa recenti,
Sed male viva caro est. Lambendo mater in artus
Fingit; et in forman, quantum capit ipsa, reductit.

Metam. xv. 379.
But all thy light can ne'er evict,
That ever synod-man was lickt,
Or brought to any other fashion
Than his own will and inclination.
But thou dost further yet in this Oppugn thyself and sense; that is,
Thou would'st have presbyters to go
For bears and dogs, and bearwards too;
A strange chimæra of beasts and men,
Made up of pieces het’rogene;
Such as in nature never met,
In eodem subjecto yet.
Thy other arguments are all
Supposures hypothetical,
That do but beg; and we may chuse
Either to grant them, or refuse.
Much thou hast said, which I know when,
And where thou stol’st from other men;
Whereby ’tis plain thy light and gifts
Are all but plagiarie shifts;
And is the same that Ranter said,
Who, arguing with me, broke my head,
And tore a handful of my beard;
The self-same cavils then I heard,

Pliny, in his Natural History, lib. viii. c. 54. says: "Hi sunt candida informisque caro, paulo muribus major, sine oculis, sine pilo: unguies tantum prominent: hanc lambendo paulatim figurant." But this silly opinion is refuted by Brown in his Vulgar Errors, book iii. ch. 6.

1 Chimæra was a fabulous monster, thus described by Homer:

> ἠῇ δ’ ἐν ἔν Σίνον γένος, οὐδ’ ἀνθρώπων

Πρόδει θείων, ὅπιθεν ὕ δ’ ἄρακων, μέσῃ δ’ ἰχθυα.

Iliad. vi. 180.

Eustathius, on the passage, has abundance of Greek learning. Hesiod has given the chimæra three heads. Theog. 319.

2 The ranters were a wild sect, that denied all the doctrines of religion, natural and revealed. With one of these the knight had entered into a dispute, and at last came to blows. See a ranter’s character in Butler’s Posthumous Works. Whitelocke says, the soldiers in the parliament army were frequently punished for being ranters. Nero clothed christians in the skins of wild beasts; but these wrapt wild beasts in the skins of christians.
When b'ing in hot dispute about
This controversy, we fell out;
And what thou know'st I answer'd then
Will serve to answer'd thee agen.
Quoth Ralpho, Nothing but th' abuse
Of human learning you produce;
Learning, that cobweb of the brain,
Profane, erroneous, and vain; ¹

¹ Dr. South, in his sermon preached in Westminster Abbey, 1692, says, speaking of the times about 50 years before, Latin unto them was a mortal crime, and Greek looked upon as a sin against the Holy Ghost; that all learning was then cried down, so that with them the best preachers were such as could not read, and the ablest divines such as could not write: in all their preachments they so highly pretended to the spirit, that they hardly could spell the letter. To be blind, was with them the proper qualification of a spiritual guide, and to be book-learned (as they called it) and to be irreligious, were almost terms convertible.
None were thought fit for the ministry but tradesmen and mechanics, because none else were allowed to have the spirit. Those only were accounted like St. Paul who could work with their hands, and, in a literal sense, drive the nail home, and be able to make a pulpit before they preached in it.

The independents and anabaptists were great enemies to all human learning: they thought that preaching, and every thing else, was to come by inspiration.

When Jack Cade ordered lord Say's head to be struck off, he said to him: "I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traiterously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar school; and whereas, before, our forefathers had no other books, but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun and a verb;
and such abominable words as no christian ear can endure to hear."
Henry VI. Part II. Act. iv. sc. 7. In Mr. Butler's MS. I find the following reflections on this subject.

"The modern doctrine of the court, that men's natural parts are rather impaired than improved by study and learning, is ridiculously false; and the design of it as plain as its ignorant nonsense—no more than what the levellers and quakers found out before them; that is, to bring down all other men, whom they have no possibility of coming near any other way, to an equality with themselves; that no man may be thought to receive any advantage by that, which they, with all their confidence, dare not pretend to."

"It is true that some learned men, by their want of judgment and discretion, will sometimes do and say things that appear ridiculous to those who are entirely ignorant: but he, who from hence takes measure of all others, is most indiscreet. For no one can make another
A trade of knowledge as replete,
As others are with fraud and cheat;
An art t' incumber gifts and wit,
And render both for nothing fit;

man's want of reason a just cause for not improving his own, but he who would have been as little the better for it, if he had taken the same pains."

"He is a fool that has nothing of philosophy in him; but not so much so as he who has nothing else but philosophy."

"He that has less learning than his capacity is able to manage, shall have more use of it than he that has more than he can master; for no man can possibly have a ready and active command of that which is too heavy for him, Qui ultra facultates sapit, desipit. Sense and reason are too chargeable for the ordinary occasions of scholars, and what they are not able to go to the expense of: therefore metaphysics are better for their purposes, as being cheap, which any dunce may bear the expense of, and which make a better noise in the ears of the ignorant than that which is true and right. Non qui plurima, sed qui utilia legerunt, eruditi habendi."

"A blind man knows he cannot see, and is glad to be led, though it be but by a dog; but he that is blind in his understanding, which is the worst blindness of all, believes he sees as well as the best; and scorns a guide.

"Men glory in that which is their infelicity. — Learning Greek and Latin, to understand the sciences contained in them, which commonly proves no better bargain than he makes, who breaks his teeth to crack a nut, which has nothing but a maggot in it. He that hath many languages to express his thoughts, but no thoughts worth expressing, is like one who can write a good hand, but never the better sense; or one who can cast up any sums of money, but has none to reckon."

"They who study mathematics only to fix their minds, and render them steadier to apply to other things, as there are many who profess to do, are as wise as those who think, by rowing in boats, to learn to swim."

"He that has made an hasty march through most arts and sciences, is like an ill captain, who leaves garrisons and strong holds behind him."

"The arts and sciences are only tools,
Which students do their business with in schools;
Although great men have said, 'tis more abstruse,
And hard to understand them, than their use.
And though they were intended but in order
To better things, few ever venture further.
But as all good designs are so accurst,
The best intended often prove the worst;
So what was meant t' improve the world, quite cross,
Has turn'd to its calamity and loss."

"The greatest part of learning's only meant
For curiosity and ornament.
And therefore most pretending virtuosos,
Like Indians, bore their lips and flat their noses.
Makes light unactive, dull and troubled,
Like little David in Saul's doublet:¹
A cheat that scholars put upon
Other men's reason and their own;
A sort of error to ensconce
Absurdity and ignorance,
That renders all the avenues
To truth impervious, and abstruse,
By making plain things, in debate,
By art perplex'd, and intricate:

When 'tis their artificial want of wit,
That spoils their work, instead of mending it.
To prove by syllogism is but to spell,
A proposition like a syllable."
"Critics esteem no sciences so noble,
As worn out languages, to vamp and cobble.
And when they had corrected all old copies,
To cut themselves out work, made new and foppish,
Assum'd an arbitrary power t' invent
And overdo what th' author never meant.
Could find a deeper subtler meaning out,
Than th' innocentest writer ever thought."
"Good scholars are but journeymen to nature,
That shews them all their tricks to imitate her:
Though some mistake the reason she proposes,
And make them imitate their virtuosos.
And arts and sciences are but a kind
Of trade and occupation of the mind:
An exercise by which mankind is taught
The discipline and management of thought
To best advantages; and takes its lesson
From nature, or her secretary reason.—
Is both the best or worst way of instructing,
As men mistake or understand her doctrine:
That as it happens proves the legerdemain,
Or practical dexterity of the brain:
And renders all that have to do with books,
The fairest gamesters, or the falsest rooks.
For there's a wide and a vast difference,
Between a man's own, and another's sense;
As is of those that drive a trade upon
Other men's reputation and their own.
And as more cheats are used in public stocks,
So those that trade upon account of books,
Are greater rooks than he who singly deals
Upon his own account and nothing steals."
¹ See 1 Samuel xvii. 38.

VOL. 1.  Q
For nothing goes for sense or light
That will not with old rules jump right,
As if rules were not in the schools
Deriv'd from truth, but truth from rules.¹

This pagan, heathenish invention
Is good for nothing but contention.
For as in sword-and-buckler fight,
All blows do on the target light;
So when men argue, the great' st part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument.

Quoth Hudibras, Friend Ralph, thou hast
Out-run the constable at last;
For thou art fallen on a new Dispute, as senseless as untrue,
But to the former opposite,
And contrary as black to white;
Mere disparata,² that concerning
Presbytery, this human learning;
Two things s' averse, they never yet,
But in thy rambling fancy, met.
But I shall take a fit occasion
T' evince thee by ratiocination,
Some other time, in place more proper
Than this w' are in: therefore let's stop here,
And rest our weary'd bones awhile,
Already tir'd with other toil.

¹ Bishop Warburton, in a note on these lines, says: "This observation is just, the logicians have run into strange absurdities of this kind:
² Peter Ramus, the best of them, in his Logic, rejects a very just argument of Cicero's as sophistical, because it did not jump right with his rules."
² Things totally different from each other.
HUDIBRAS.

PART II. CANTO I.
ARGUMENT.

The Knight being clapp'd by th' heels in prison,
The last unhappy expedition,
Love brings his action on the case,
And lays it upon Hudibras.
How he receives the lady's visit,
And cunningly solicits his suit,
Which she defers: yet, on parole,
Redeems him from th' enchanted hole.

1 In the author's corrected copy, printed 1674, the lines stand thus; but in the edition printed ten years before, we read:

The knight, by damnable magician,
Being cast illegally in prison.

In the edition of 1701 the old reading was restored, but we have in general used the author's corrected copy.

2 We may observe how justly Mr. Butler, who was an able lawyer, applies all law terms. — An action on the case, is a general action given for redress of wrongs and injuries, done without force, and by law not provided against, in order to have satisfaction for damages. — The author informs us, in his own note, at the beginning of this canto, that he had the fourth Æneis of Virgil in view, which passes from the tumults of war and the fatigues of a dangerous voyage, to the tender subject of love. The French translator has divided the poem into nine cantos, and not into parts: but, as the poet published his work at three different times, and in his corrected copy continued the division into parts, it is taking too great a liberty for any commentator to alter that arrangement; especially as he might do it, as before observed, in imitation of Spenser, and the Italian and Spanish poets Tasso, Ariosto, Alonso de Ercilla, &c. &c.
CANTO I.

But now, t' observe romantique method,
Let rusty steel awhile be sheathed;
And all those harsh and rugged sounds¹
Of bastinadoes, cuts, and wounds,
Exchang'd to love's more gentle style,
To let our reader breathe awhile:
In which, that we may be as brief as
Is possible, by way of preface.

Is't not enough to make one strange,²
That some men's fancies should ne'er change,
But make all people do and say
The same things still the self-same way?³

¹ Shakspeare says,
   "Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings,
   "Our dreadful marches to delightful measures."
   Richard III. Act. i. sc. 1.

² That is, to make one wonder: strange, here, is an adjective; when a man sees a new or unexpected object, he is said to be strange to it.

³ Few men have genius enough to vary their style; both poets and painters are very apt to be mannerists.
Some writers make all ladies purloin'd,
And knights pursuing like a whirlwind:
Others make all their knights, in fits
Of jealousy, to lose their wits;
Till drawing blood o' th' dames, like witches,
They're forthwith curd of their capriches.¹
Some always thrive in their amours,
By pulling plasters off their sores;²
As cripples do to get an alms,
Just so do they, and win their dames.
Some force whole regions, in despite
O' geography, to change their site;
Make former times shake hands with latter,
And that which was before, come after;³
But those that write in rhyme still make
The one verse for the other's sake;
For one for sense, and one for rhyme,
I think's sufficient at one time.

But we forget in what sad plight
We whilom left the captiv'd Knight
And pensive Squire, both bruis'd in body,
And conjur'd into safe custody.
Tir'd with dispute, and speaking Latin,
As well as basting and bear-baiting,
And desperate of any course,
To free himself by wit or force,

¹ It was a vulgar notion that, if you drew blood from a witch, she could not hurt you. Thus Cleveland, in his Rebel Scot:
Scots are like witches; do but whet your pen,
Scratch till the blood comes, they'll not hurt you then.
² By shewing their wounds to the ladies — [who, it must be remembered, in the times of chivalry, were instructed in surgery and the healing art. In the romance of Perceforest, a young lady puts in the dislocated arm of a knight.]
³ These were common faults with romance writers: even Shakspeare and Virgil have not wholly avoided them. The former transports his characters, in a quarter of an hour, from France to England: the latter has formed an intrigue between Dido and Æneas, who probably lived in very distant periods. The Spanish writers are complained of for these errors.— Don Quixote, vol. ii. ch. 21.
CANTO I.

HUDIBRAS.

His only solace was, that now
His dog-bolt fortune was so low,
That either it must quickly end,
Or turn about again, and mend: 1
In which he found th' event, no less
Than other times, beside his guess.

There is a tall long-sided dame, — 2
But wond'rous light — ycleped Fame,
That like a thin camelion boards
Herself on air, 3 and eats her words; 4
Upon her shoulders wings she wears
Like hanging sleeves, lin'd thro' with ears,

1 It was a maxim among the stoic philosophers, many of whose tenets seem to be adopted by our knight, that things which were violent could not be lasting. Si longa est, levis est; si gravis est, brevis est. The term dog-bolt, may be taken from the situation of a rabbit, or other animal, that is forced from its hole by a dog, and then said to bolt. Unless it ought to have been written dog-bote, which in the Saxon law, signifies a recompense for an hurt or injury. — Cyclopædia. In English, dog, in composition, like ἐυς in Greek, implies that the thing denoted by the noun annexed to it, is vile, bad, savage, or unfortunate in its kind: thus dog-rose, dog-latin, dog-trick, dog-cheap, and many others. [Archdeacon Nares considers dog-bolt evidently as a term of reproach, and gives quotations from Jonson to that effect, and adds that no compound of dog and bolt, in any sense, appears to afford an interpretation of it. The happiest illustration of the text is afforded by Archdeacon Todd from Beaumont and Fletcher's Spanish Curate: "For to say truth, the lawyer is a dogbolt," "An arrant worm."]

2 Our author has evidently followed Virgil (Æn. iv.) in some parts of this description of Fame. Thus:

Ingrediturque solo, et caput inter nubila condit.
—— malum qua non alidvelocius ullum:
Mobilitate viget, viresque acquirit eundo.
—— pedibus celerem et pernicius alis.
—— cui, quot sunt corpore plumæ,
Tot vigiles oculi subter, mirabile dictu,
Tot linguae, totidem ora sonant, tot subrigit aures.
Tam facti pravique tenax quam nuntia veri.

3 The vulgar notion is, that camelions live on air, but they are known to feed on flies, caterpillars, and other insects.

4 Mr. Warburton has an ingenious note on this passage. "The beauty of it," he says, "consists in the double meaning: the first alluding to "Fame's living on report; the second, an insinuation that, if a report "is narrowly inquired into, and traced up to the original author, it is "made to contradict itself."
And eyes, and tongues, as poets list,
Made good by deep mythologist:
With these she through the welkin flies,\(^1\)
And sometimes carries truth, oft' lies;
With letters hung, like eastern pigeons,\(^2\)
And Mercuries of furthest regions;
Diurnals writ for regulation
Of lying, to inform the nation,\(^3\)
And by their public use to bring down
The rate of whetstones in the kingdom:\(^4\)

\(^1\) Welkin is derived from the Anglo-Saxon wole, wolcn, clouds. [Lye gives as one meaning of wole, ær, æther, firmamentum. The welkin. It is used, in general, by the English poets, for we seldom meet with it in prose, to denote the sky or visible region of the air. But Chaucer seems to distinguish between sky and welkin:
- He let a certaine winde ygo,
- That blew so hideously and hie,
- That it ne lefte not a skie, (cloud)
- In all the welkin long and brode.

\(^2\) Every one has heard of the pigeons of Aleppo, which served as couriers. The birds were taken from their young ones, and conveyed to any distant places in open cages. If it was necessary to send home any intelligence, a pigeon was let loose, with a billet tied to her foot, and she flew back with the utmost expedition. They would return in ten hours from Alexandretto to Aleppo, and in two days from Bagdad. Savary says they have traversed the former in the space of five or six hours. This method was practised at Mutina, when besieged by Antony. See Pliny's Natural History, lib. x. 37. Anacreon's Dove says, she was employed to carry love-letters for her master.

\(^3\) The newspapers of those times, called Mercuries and Diurnals, were not more authentic than similar publications are at present. Each party had its Mercuries: there was Mercurius Rusticus, and Mercurius Aulicus.

\(^4\) The observations on the learning of Shakspeare will explain this passage. We there read: "a happy talent for lying, familiar enough to those men of fire, who looked on every one graver than themselves as their whetstone." This, you may remember, is a proverbial term, denoting an excitement to lying, or a subject that gave a man an opportunity of breaking a jest upon another.

--- fungar vice cotis. Hor. Ars Poet. l. 304.

Thus Shakspeare makes Celia reply to Rosalind upon the entry of the Clown: "Fortune hath sent this natural for our whetstone; for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits." And Jonson, alluding to the same, in the character of Amorphus, says: "He will lye cheaper than any beggar, and louder than any clock; for which
About her neck a pacquet-male,¹
Fraught with advice, some fresh, some stale,
Of men that walk'd when they were dead,
And cows of monsters brought to bed:
Of hail-stones big as pullets' eggs,
And puppies whelp'd with twice two legs:²
A blazing star seen in the west,
By six or seven men at least.
Two trumpets she does sound at once,³
But both of clean contrary tones;
But whether both with the same wind,
Or one before, and one behind,⁴
We know not, only this can tell,
The one sounds vilely, th' other well,
And therefore vulgar authors name
The one Good, th' other Evil Fame.

¹ This is a good trait in the character of Fame: laden with reports, as a post-boy with letters in his male. The word male is derived from the Greek μῆλον, ovis; μελᾶς, pellis ovina; because made of leather, frequently sheep-skin: hence the French word maille, now written in English, mail.

² To make this story wonderful as the rest, ought we not to read—thrice two, or twice four legs?

³ In Pope's Temple of Fame, she has the trumpet of eternal praise, and the trumpet of slander. Chaucer makes Æolus an attendant on Fame, and blow the clarion of laud, and the clarion of slander, alternately, according to her directions: the latter is described as black and stinking.

⁴ This Hudibrastick description is imitated, but very unequally, by Cotton, in his Travesty of the fourth book of Virgil.
This tattling gossip knew too well,
What mischief Hudibras befel;
And straight the spightful tidings bears,
Of all, to th' unkind widow's ears.
Democritus ne'er laughed so loud,
To see bawds carted through the crowd,
Or funerals with stately pomp,
March slowly on in solemn dump,
As she laugh'd out, until her back,
As well as sides, was like to crack.
She vow'd she would go see the sight,
And visit the distressed Knight,
To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour;
And from his wooden jail, the stocks,
To set at large his fetter-locks,
And by exchange, parole, or ransom,
To free him from th' enchanted mansion.
This b'ing resolv'd, she call'd for hood
And usher, implements abroad
Which ladies wear, beside a slender
Young waiting damsel to attend her.
All which appearing, on she went
To find the Knight in limbo pent.
And 'twas not long before she found
Him, and his stout Squire, in the pound;

1 Gossip or god-sib is a Saxon word, signifying cognata ex parte dei, or godmother. It is now likewise become an appellation for any idle woman. Tattle, i. e. sine modo garrire.

2 Protinus ad regem cursus detorquet Jaran
Incenditque animum dictis. Virg. Æn. iv. 196.

3 Perpetuo risu pulnonem agitare solebat
Democritus —
Ridebat curas, nec non et gaudia vulgi,
Interdum et lacrymas. Juv. Sat. x. 34 — 51.

4 Some have doubted whether the word usher denotes an attendant, or part of her dress; but from P. iii. c. iii. 1. 399. it is plain that it signifies the former.

Beside two more of her retinue,
To testify what pass'd between you.
Both coupled in enchanted tether,
By further leg behind together:
For as he sat upon his rump,
His head, like one in doleful dump,
Between his knees, his' hands apply'd
Unto his ears on either side,
And by him, in another hole,
Afflicted Ralpho, cheek by joul, ¹
She came upon him in his wooden Magician's circle, on the sudden,
As spirits do t' a conjurer,
When in their dreadful shapes th' appear.

No sooner did the Knight perceive her,
But straight he fell into a fever,
Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place;
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl;
He felt his brains begin to swim,
When thus the Dame accosted him:

This place, quoth she, they say's enchanted,
And with delinquent spirits haunted;
That here are ty'd in chains, and scourg'd,
Until their guilty crimes be purg'd:
Look, there are two of them appear
Like persons I have seen somewhere:
Some have mistaken blocks and posts
For spectres, apparitions, ghosts,
With saucer-eyes and horns; and some
Have heard the devil beat a drum: ²

¹ That is, cheek to cheek: sometimes pronounced jig by jole; but here properly written, and derived from two Anglo-Saxon words, ceac, maxilla, and ciol, or ceole, guttur.
² The story of Mr. Mompesson's house being haunted by a drummer, made a great noise about the time our author wrote. The narrative is in Mr. Glanvil's book of Witchcraft.
But if our eyes are not false glasses,
That give a wrong account of faces,
That beard and I should be acquainted,
Before 'twas conjur'd and enchanted.
For though it be disfigur'd somewhat,
As if 't had lately been in combat,
It did belong t' a worthy Knight,
Howe'er this goblin is come by' t.

When Hudibras the Lady heard,
To take kind notice of his beard,
And speak with such respect and honour,
Both of the beard and the beard's owner,

He thought it best to set as good
A face upon it as he cou'd,
And thus he spoke: Lady, your bright,
And radiant eyes are in the right;
The beard's th' identique beard you knew,
The same numerically true:
Nor is it worn by fiend or elf,
But its proprietor himself.

O heavens! quoth she, can that be true?
I do begin to fear 'tis you;
Not by your individual whiskers,
But by you dialect and discourse,
That never spoke to man or beast,
In notions vulgarly exprest:

---

1 See the dignity of the beard maintained by Dr. Bulwer in his Artificial Changeling, p. 196. He says, shaving the chin is justly to be accounted a note of effeminacy, as appears by eunuchs, who produce not a beard, the sign of virility. Alexander and his officers did not shave their beards till they were effeminated by Persian luxury. It was late before barbers were in request at Rome: they first came from Sicily 454 years after the foundation of Rome. Varro tells us, they were introduced by Ticinius Mena. Scipio Africanus was the first who shaved his face every day: the emperor Augustus used this practice. See Pliny's Nat. Hist. b. vii. c. 56. Diogenes seeing one with a smooth shaved chin, said to him, "Hast thou whereof to accuse nature for making thee a "man and not a woman." — The Rhodians and Byzantines, contrary to the practice of modern Russians, persisted against their laws and edicts in shaving, and the use of the razor,—Ulmus de fine barbae humanae, is
But what malignant star, alas!
Has brought you both to this sad pass?
Quoth he, The fortune of the war,
Which I am less afflicted for,
Than to be seen with beard and face
By you in such a homely case.
Quoth she, Those need not be ashamed
For being honourably maim'd;
If he that is in battle conquer'd,
Have any title to his own beard,
Tho' yours he sorely lugg'd and torn,
It does your visage more adorn
Than if 'twere prun'd, and starch'd, and lander'd,
And cut square by the Russian standard.

A torn beard's like a tatter'd ensign,
That's bravest which there are most rents in.
That petticoat, about your shoulders,
Does not so well become a soldier's;
And I'm afraid they are worse handled,
Altho' i' th' rear, your beard the van led;

of opinion, that the beard seems not merely for ornament, or age, or sex, not for covering, nor cleanliness, but to serve the office of the human soul. And that nature gave to mankind a beard, that it might remain as an index in the face of the masculine generative faculty. — Beard-haters are by Barclay clapp'd on board the ship of fools:

Laudis erat quandam barbatos esse parentes
Atque supercilium mento gestare pudico
Socratis exemplo, barbam nutrire soiebant
Cultores sophiae.

False hair was worn by the Roman ladies. Martial says:

Jurat capillos esse, quos emit, suos
Fabulla nunquid illa, Paule, pejerat.

And again: Ovid. de Art. Amandi, iii. 195:

Foemina procedit densissima crinibus emptis;
Proque suis alios efficat are suos;
Nec pudor est emisse palam. —

1 The beaus in the reigns of James I. and Charles I. spent as much time in dressing their beards, as modern beaus do in dressing their hair; and many of them kept a person to read to them while the operation was performing. It is well known what great difficulty the Czar Peter of Russia met with in obliging his subjects to cut off their beards.

2 The van is the front or fore part of an army, and commonly the post...
And those uneasy bruises make
My heart for company to ake,
To see so worshipful a friend
I' th' pillory set, at the wrong end.

Quoth Hudibras, This thing call'd pain, 1
Is, as the learned stoics maintain,
Not bad simpliciter, nor good,
But merely as 'tis understood.
Sense is deceitful, and may feign
As well in counterfeiting pain
As other gross phænomenas,
In which it oft mistakes the case.
But since th' immortal intellect,
That's free from error and defect,
Whose objects still persist the same,
Is free from outward bruise or maim,
Which nought external can expose
To gross material bangs or blows,
It follows we can ne'er be sure
Whether we pain or not endure;
And just so far are sore and griev'd,
As by the fancy is believ'd.
Some have been wounded with conceit,
And died of mere opinion straight; 2 of danger and honour; the rear the hinder part. So that making a front in the rear must be retreating from the enemy. By this comical expression the lady signifies that he turned tail to them, by which means his shoulders sped worse than his beard.

1 Some tenets of the stoic philosophers are here burlesqued with great humour.

2 In Grey's note on this passage there are several stories of this sort ; of which the most remarkable is the case of the Chevalier Jarre, " who was upon the scaffold at Troyes, had his hair cut off, the handkerchief before his eyes, and the sword in the executioner's hand to cut off his head; but the king pardoned him: being taken up, his fear had so taken hold of him, that he could not stand or speak: they led him to bed, and opened a vein, but no blood would come." Lord Strafford's Letters, vol. i. p. 166.
Others, tho' wounded sore in reason,
Felt no contusion, nor discretion.
A Saxon Duke did grow so fat,
That mice, as histories relate,
Ate grots and labyrinths to dwell in
His postique parts, without his feeling;
Then how is't possible a kick
Should e'er reach that way to the quick?

Quoth she, I grant it is in vain,
For one that's basted to feel pain;
Because the pangs his bones endure,
Contribute nothing to the cure;
Yet honour hurt, is wont to rage
With pain no med'cine can assuage.

Quoth he, That honour's very squeamish
That takes a basting for a blemish:
For what's more honourable than scars,
Or skin to tatters rent in wars?
Some have been beaten till they know
What wood a cudgel's of by th' blow;
Some kick'd, until they can feel whether
A shoe be Spanish or neat's leather:

---

1 As it is here stopp'd, it signifies, others though really and sorely wounded, (see the Lady's Answer, line 217) felt no bruise or cut: but if we put a semicolon after sore, and no stop after reason, the meaning may be, others, though wounded sore in body, yet in mind or imagination felt no bruise or cut. Discretion, here signifies a cut, or separation of parts.

2 He justly argues from this story, that if a man could be so gnawed and mangled in those parts, without his feeling it, a kick in the same place would not much hurt him. See Butler's Remains, vol. i. p. 31. where it is asserted, that the note in the old editions is by Butler himself. I cannot fix this story on any particular duke of Saxony. It may be paralleled by the case of an inferior animal, as related by a pretended eye-witness.—In Arcadia scio me esse spectatum suem, quæ præ pinguedine carnis, non modo surgere non posset; sed etiam ut in ejus corpore sorex, exesâ carne, nidum fecisset, et peperisset mures. Varro, ii. 4. 12.
And yet have met, after long running,
With some whom they have taught that cunning.
The furthest way about, 't o'ercome,
I' th' end does prove the nearest home.
By laws of learned duelists,
They that are bruis'd with wood, or fists,
And think one beating may for once
Suffice, are cowards and poltroons:
But if they dare engage 't a second,
They're stout and gallant fellows reckon'd.

Th' old Romans freedom did bestow,
Our princes worship, with a blow:
King Pyrrhus cur'd his splenetic
And testy courtiers with a kick.
The Negus, when some mighty lord
Or potentate's to be restor'd,
And pardon'd for some great offence,
With which he's willing to dispense,

---

1 One form of declaring a slave free, at Rome, was for the prætor, in the presence of certain persons, to give the slave a light stroke with a small stick, from its use called vindicta.

Tunc mihi dominus, rerum imperii hominumque
Tot tantisque minor; quem ter vindicta quaterque
Imposita haud unquam miserâ formidine privet?
Horat. Sat. ii. 7. 75.

Vindicta, postquam meus a praetore recessi,
Cur mihi non liceat jussit quodcunque voluntas.
Persius, v. 88.

Sometimes freedom was given by an alapa, or blow with the open hand upon the face or head:

Vertigo facit.
Pers. v. 75.

Quos manu mittebant eos, Alapa percussos, circumagebant ct liberos confirmandant: from hence, perhaps, came the saying of a man's being giddy, or having his head turned with his good fortune.

Verterit hunc dominus, momento turbinis exit
Marcus Dama.
Pers. v. 78.

2 It was a general belief that he could cure the spleen by sacrificing a white cock, and with his right foot gently pressing the spleen of the persons, laid down on their backs, a little on one side. Nor was any so poor and inconsiderable as not to receive the benefit of his royal touch, if he desired it. The toe of that foot was said to have a divine virtue, for after his death, the rest of his body being consumed, this was found unhurt and untouched by the fire.

Vid. Plutarch. in Vita Pyrrhi, sub initio.

3 Negus was king of Abyssinia.
First has him laid upon his belly,
Then beaten back and side, t' a jelly;
That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows;
Departs not meanly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent rib-roasting.

The beaten soldier proves most manful,
That, like his sword, endures the anvil,
And justly's found so formidable,
The more his valour's malleable:
But he that fears a bastinado,
Will run away from his own shadow:
And though I'm now in durance fast,
By our own party basely cast,
Ransom, exchange, parole, refus'd,
And worst than by the en'my us'd;
In close catasta shut, past hope
Of wit or valour to elope;
As beards, the nearer that they tend
To th' earth, still grow more reverend;
And cannons shoot the higher pitches,
The lower we let down their breeches;
I'll make this low dejected fate
Advance me to a greater height.

Quoth she, You've almost made m' in love
With that which did my pity move.

---

1 This story is told in Le Blanc's Travels, Part ii. ch. 4.
2 —— τοπτεσθαι, μύδος
υπομένειν πληγάς, ἀκμῶν.
See the character of a parasite in the Comic Fragments. Grot. dicta Poetarum apud Stobæum.
3 The fury of Bucephalus proceeded from the fear of his own shadow. Rabelais, vol. i. c. 14.
4 A cage or prison wherein slaves were exposed for sale:
———ne sit præstantior alter
Cappadocas rigida pingues plansisse catasta.
5 ———ὥτε μηδεὶς πρὸς θεῶν
Πράττων κακῶς λιαν ἀθυμίηγα ποτε.
Great wits and valours, like great states,
Do sometimes sink with their own weights:
Th' extremes of glory and of shame,
Like east and west, become the same.
No Indian Prince has to his palace
More followers than a thief to the gallows.
But if a beating seems so brave,
What glories must a whipping have?
Such great atchievements cannot fail
To cast salt on a woman's tail:
For if I thought your nat'ral talent
Of passive courage were so gallant,
As you strain hard to have it thought,
I could grow amorous, and dote.

When Hudibras this language heard,
He prick'd up's ears, and strok'd his beard;
Thought he, this is the lucky hour,
Wines work when vines are in the flower:
This crisis then I'll set my rest on,
And put her boldly to the quest' on.

---

2 That is, glory and shame, which are as opposite as east and west, become the same as in the two following verses:
No Indian prince has to his palace
More followers than a thief to the gallows.
3 Alluding to the common saying: — You will catch the bird if you throw salt on his tail.
4 A proverbial expression for the fairest and best opportunity of doing any thing. It is a common observation among brewers, distillers of Geneva, and vinegar makers, that their liquors ferment best when the plants used in them are in flower. Bocrahaave's Chem. 4to. p. 288. Hudibras vainly compares himself to the vine in flower, for he thinks he has set the widow fermenting. Willis de Ferment. says, Vulgo increbuit opinio quod selecta quaedam anni temporae, ea nimirum in quibus vegetabilia cujus generis florent, &c. et vina quo tempore vitis efflorecit, turgescentias denuo concipient. See also sir Kenelm Digby on the cure of wounds by sympathetic powder. Stains in linen, by vegetable juices, are most easily taken out when the several plants are in their prime. Examples, in raspberries, quinces, hops, &c. See Boyle's History of Air.
Madam, what you would seem to doubt
Shall be to all the world made out,
How I've been drubb'd, and with what spirit,
And magnanimity, I bear it;
And if you doubt it to be true,
I'll stake myself down against you:
And if I fail in love or troth, 1
Be you the winner, and take both.

Quoth she, I've heard old cunning stagers
Say, fools for arguments use wagers.
And though I prais'd your valour, yet
I did not mean to baulk your wit,
Which, if you have, you must needs know
What, I have told you before now,
And you b' experiment have prov'd,
I cannot love where I'm belov'd.

Quoth Hudibras, 'Tis a caprich 2
Beyond the infliction of a witch;
So cheats to play with those still aim,
That do not understand the game.
Love in your heart as idly burns,
As fire in antique Roman urns, 3

---

1 The word troth, from the Saxon treoth, signifies punctuality or fidelity in performing an agreement.
2 A whim or fancy; from the Italian word capriccio.
3 Fortunius Licetus wrote a large discourse concerning these urns; from whence Bishop Wilkins, in his Mathematical Memoirs, hath recited many particulars. In Camden's Description of Yorkshire, a lamp is said to have been found in the tomb of Constantius Chlorus. An extraordinary one is mentioned by St. Augustin, de Civitate Dei, 21. 6. Argyro est phanum Veneris super mare: ibi est lucerna super candelabrum posita, lucens ad mare sub divo celi, nam neque ventus aspergit neque pluvia extinguit. The story of the lamp, in the sepulchre of Tullia, the daughter of Cicero, which was supposed to have burnt above 1550 years, is told by Pancirollus and others; sed credat Judæus. M. le Prince de St. Severe accounts for the appearance on philosophical principles, in a pamphlet published at Naples, 1753. "Je crois," says he, "d'avoir convaincu d'être fabuleuse l'opinion des lampes perpetuelles des anciens. Les lumieres imaginaires, que l'on a vu quelquefois dans les anciens sepulcres, ont été produites par le subite ascension des sels qui y etoient renfermées." He should rather have said, by the inflammable
To warm the dead, and vainly light
Those only that see nothing by’t.
Have you not power to entertain,
And render love for love again?
As no man can draw in his breath
At once, and force out air beneath.
Or do you love yourself so much,
To bear all rivals else a grutch?
What fate can lay a greater curse,
Than you upon yourself would force;
For wedlock without love, some say,
Is but a lock without a key.
It is a kind of rape to marry
One that neglects, or cares not for ye:
For what does make it ravishment
But b’ing against the mind’s consent?
A rape, that is the more inhuman,
For being acted by a woman.
Why are you fair, but to entice us
To love you, that you may despise us?
But though you cannot love, you say,
Out of your own fantastic way,¹
Why should you not, at least, allow
Those that love you, to do so too:
For, as you fly me, and pursue
Love more averse, so I do you:

¹ It has generally been printed fanatic; but, I believe, most readers will approve of Dr. Grey’s alteration. It agrees better with the sense, and with what she says afterwards:

Yet ’tis no fantastic pique
I have to love, nor coy dislike.

Though fanatic sometimes signifies mad, irrational, absurd: thus Juvenal, iv:

— ut fanaticus aestro,
Percussus, Bellona, tuo—

air, so frequently generated in pits and caverns. This supposition is confirmed by a letter of Jerome Giordano to the noble author, dated Lucera, Sept. 19, 1753, giving a curious account of an ancient sepulchre opened there in that year.
And am, by your own doctrine, taught
To practise what you call a fault.
Quoth she, If what you say be true,
You must fly me, as I do you;
But 'tis not what we do, but say,
In love, and preaching, that must sway.
Quoth he, To bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hickup:
Command me to piss out the moon,
And 'twill as easily be done.
Love's power's too great to be withstood
By feeble human flesh and blood.
'Twas he that brought upon his knees
The hect'ring kill-cow Hercules;
Reduc'd his leaguer-lion's skin
T' a petticoat,¹ and made him spin:
Seiz'd on his club, and made it dwindle ²
'T' a feeble distaff, and a spindle.
'Twas he made emperors gallants
To their own sisters, and their aunts;

¹ Leaguer signifies a siege laid to a town; it seems to be also used for a pitched or standing camp: a leaguer coat is a sort of watch cloak, or coat used by soldiers when they are at a siege, or upon duty. Hudibras here speaks of the lion's skin as Hercules's leaguer, or military habit, his campaign coat. See Skinner's Lexicon; art. Leaguer. Læna, in Latin, is by Ainsworth translated a soldier's leaguer coat. Hercules changed clothes with Omphale.

² Mæonias inter calathum tenuisse puellas
Diceris; et dominæ pertimuisse minas.
Non fugis, Alcide, victricem mille laborum
Rasilibus calathis imposuisse manum?
Crassaque robusto deducis pollice fila,
Æquaque formosæ pensa rependis heræ.

Ovid. Fasti, ii.
Set popes and cardinals agog,
To play with pages at leap-frog;¹
'Twas he that gave our senate purges,
And flux'd the house of many a burgess;²
Made those that represent the nation
Submit, and suffer amputation:
And all the grandees o' th' cabal,
Adjourn to tubs. at spring and fall.
He mounted synod-men, and rode 'em
To Dirty-lane and Little Sodom;
Made 'em curvet, like Spanish gennets,
And take the ring at madam.³
'Twas he that made Saint Francis do
More than the devil could tempt him to;⁴
In cold and frosty weather grow
Enamour'd of a wife of snow;
And though she were of rigid temper,
With melting flames accost and tempt her:
Which, after in enjoyment quenching,
He hung a garland on his engine.⁵
Quoth she, If love have these effects,
Why is it not forbid our sex?
Why is't not damn'd, and interdicted,
For diabolical and wicked?
And sung, as out of tune, against,
As Turk and Pope are by the saints.⁶

¹ Cardinal Casa, archbishop of Beneventum, was accused of having written some Italian verses, in his youth, in praise of sodomy.
² This alludes to Oliver Cromwell turning the members out of the house of commons, and calling Harry Martin and sir Peter Wentworth whoresmasters. Echard's History of England, vol. ii. p. 275.
³ The Tatler mentions a lady of this stamp, called Bennet.
⁴ In the legend of the life of St. Francis, we are told, that being tempted by the devil in the shape of a virgin, he subdued his passion, by embracing a pillar of snow.
⁵ In the history of the life of Lewis XIII. by James Howell, Esq. p. 80. it is said, that the French horsemen, who were killed at the Isle of Rhé, had their mistresses' favours tied about their engines.
⁶ Perhaps the saints were fond of Robert Wisdom's hymn:
"Preserve us, Lord, by thy dear word—
"From Turk and Pope, defend us, Lord."
I find, I've greater reason for it,
Than I believ'd before t' abhor it.

Quoth Hudibras, These sad effects
Spring from your heathenish neglects
Of love's great pow'r, which he returns
Upon yourselves with equal scorns;
And those who worthy lovers slight,
Plagues with preposterous appetite;
This made the beauteous queen of Crete
To take a town-bull for her sweet;
And from her greatness stoop so low,
To be the rival of a cow.
Others, to prostitute their great hearts,
To be baboons' and monkeys' sweet-hearts.
Some with the dev'l himself in league grow,
By's representative a negro;
'Twas this made vestal maids love-sick,
And venture to be buried quick.
Some, by their fathers and their brothers,
To be made mistresses, and mothers.
'Tis this that proudest dames enamours
On lacquies, and varlets-des-chambres;

---

1 Pasiphaë, the wife of Minos, was in love with a man, whose name was Taurus, or bull.
2 By the Roman law the vestal virgins were buried alive, if they broke their vow of chastity.
3 Myrrha patrem, sed non quo filia debet, amavit.
   Ovid. de Arte Am. i. 285.
4 Varlet was formerly used in the same sense as valet: perhaps our poet might please himself with the meaning given to this word in later days, when it came to denote a rogue. The word knave, which now signifies a cheat, formerly meant no more than a servant. Thus, in an old translation of St. Paul's Epistles, and in Dryden. Mr. Butler, in his Posthumous Works, uses the word varlet for bumbailiff, though I do not find it in this sense in any dictionary. See Butler's Genuine Remains, vol. ii. p. 81. and 171. Thus fur in Latin:
   Quid domini faciant, audent cum talia fures.
   Virg. Ecl. iii. 16.
   Exilis domus est, ubi non et multa supersunt,
   Et dominum fallunt, et prosunt furibus.
   Hor. Epist. lib. i. 6. 45.
This passage is quoted by Plutarch in the life of Lucullus.
Their haughty stomachs overcomes,
And makes 'em stoop to dirty grooms,
To slight the world, and to disparage
Claps, issue, infamy, and marriage.¹

Quoth she, These judgments are severe,
Yet such as I should rather bear,
Than trust men with their oaths, or prove
Their faith and secrecy in love.

Says he, There is a weighty reason
Fore secrecy in love as treason.
Love is a burglarer, a felon,
That in the windore-eye ² does steal in
To rob the heart, and, with his prey,
Steals out again a closer way,
Which whosoever can discover,
He's sure, as he deserves, to suffer.
Love is a fire, that burns and sparkles
In men, as nat'rally as in charcoals,
Which sooty chymists stop in holes,
When out of wood they extract coals;³
So lovers should their passions choke,
That tho' they burn, they may not smoke.
'Tis like that sturdy thief that stole,
And dragg'd beasts backward into's hole;⁴

¹ That is, to slight the opinion of the world, and to undertake the want of issue and marriage on the one hand, and the acquisition of claps and infamy on the other: or perhaps the poet meant a bitter sneer on matrimony, by saying love makes them submit to the embraces of their inferiors, and consequently to disregard four principal evils of such connections, disease, child-bearing, disgrace, and marriage.
² Thus it is spelt in most editions, and perhaps most agreeably to the etymology. See Skinner.
³ Charcoal colliers, in order to keep their wood from blazing when it is in the pit, cover it carefully with turf and mould.
⁴ Cacus, a noted robber, who, when he had stolen cattle, drew them backward by their tails into his den, lest they should be traced and discovered:

At furiis Caci mens effera, ne quid inausum
Aut intractatum scelerisvc dolive fuisset,
Quatuor a stabulis præstanti corpore tauros
Avertit, totidem formâ superante juvencas;
So love does lovers, and us men
Draws by the tails into his den,
That no impression may discover,
And trace t' his cave the wary lover.
But if you doubt I should reveal
What you entrust me under seal,
I'll prove myself as close and virtuous
As your own secretary, Albertus.¹

Quoth she, I grant you may be close
In hiding what your aims propose:
Love-passions are like parables,
By which men still mean something else:
Tho' love be all the world's pretence,
Money's the mythologic sense,
The real substance of the shadow,
Which all address and courtship's made to.

Though he, I understand your play,
And how to quit you your own way;
He that will win his dame, must do
As Love does, when he bends his bow;
With one hand thrust the lady from,
And with the other pull her home.²
I grant, quoth he, wealth is a great
Provocative to am'rous heat:

Atque hos, ne qua forent pedibus vestigia rectis,
Caudâ in speluncam tractos, versisque viarum
Indiciis raptos, saxo occultabat opaco.

¹ Albertus Magnus was bishop of Ratisbon, about the year 1260, and wrote a book, entitled, De Secretis Mulierum. Hence the poet facetiously calls him the women's secretary. It was printed at Amsterdam, in the year 1643, with another silly book, entitled, Michaelis Scoti de Secretis Naturae Opus.
² The Harleian Miscellany, vol. vi. p. 530. describes an interview between Perkin Warbeck and lady Katharine Gordon, which may serve as no improper specimen of this kind of dalliance. "If I prevail," says he, "let this kiss seal up the contract, and this kiss bear witness to the "indentures; and this kiss, because one witness is not sufficient, con-
"summate the assurance.—And so, with a kind of reverence and "fashionable gesture, after he had kissed her thrice, he took her in "both his hands, crosswise, and gazed upon her, with a kind of putting
It is all philtres and high diet,
That makes love rampant, and to fly out:
'Tis beauty always in the flower,
That buds and blossoms at fourscore:
'Tis that by which the sun and moon,
At their own weapons are out-done:
That makes knights-errant fall in trances,
And lay about 'em in romances:
'Tis virtue, wit, and worth,
That men divine and sacred call:
For what is worth in any thing,
But so much money as 'twill bring?
Or what but riches is there known.
Which man can solely call his own;
In which no creature goes his half,
Unless it be to squint and laugh?
I do confess, with goods and land,
I'd have a wife at second hand;
And such you are: nor is't your person
My stomach's set so sharp and fierce on;
But 'tis your better part, your riches,
That my enamour'd heart bewitches:

"her from him and pulling her to him; and so again and again re-
"kissed her, and set her in her place, with a pretty manner of enforce"ment."

1 Gold and silver are marked by the sun and moon in chemistry, as they were supposed to be more immediately under the influence of those luminaries. Thus Chaucer, in the Chanones Yemannes Tale, 1. 16293.
ed. Tyrwhitt:
The bodies sevence eke, lo hem here anon:
Sol gold is, and Luna silver, we threpe,
Mars ired, Mercarie quicksilver we clepe,
Saturnus led, and Jupiter is tin,
And Venus coper, by my fader kin.

The appropriation of certain metals to the seven planets respectively, may be traced as high as Proclus, in the fifth century, and perhaps is still more ancient. This point is discussed by La Croze. See Fabric.
Biblioth. Gr. vol. vi. p. 793. The splendor of gold is more refulgent than the rays of the sun and moon.

2 Et genus, et formam, regina pecunia donat;
Ac bene nummatum decorat Suadela, Venusque.

Horat. Ep. i. 6. 37.
Let me your fortune but possess,
And settle your person how you please;
Or make it o'er in trust to the devil,
You'll find me reasonable and civil.

Quoth she, I like this plainness better
Than false mock-passion, speech or letter,
Or any feat of qualm or swooning,
But hanging of yourself, or drowning;
Your only way with me to break
Your mind, is breaking of your neck:
For as when merchants break, o'erthrown
Like nine-pins, they strike others down;
So that would break my heart; which done,
My tempting fortune is your own.

These are but trifles; ev'ry lover
Will damn himself over and over,
And greater matters undertake
For a less worthy mistress' sake:
Yet th' are the only ways to prove
Th' unfeign'd realities of love;
For he that hangs, or beats out's brains,
The devil's in him if he feigns.

Quoth Hudibras, This way's too rough
For mere experiment and proof;
It is no jesting, trivial matter,
To swing i' th' air, or plunge in water,
And, like a water-witch, try love;¹
That's to destroy, and not to prove:
As if a man should be dissected,
To find what part is disaffected:
Your better way is to make over,
In trust, your fortune to your lover;

¹ It was usual, when an old woman was suspected of witchcraft, to throw her into the water. If she swam, she was judged guilty; if she sunk, she preserved her character, and only lost her life.
Trust is a trial; if it break,
'Tis not so desp'rate as a neck:
Beside, th' experiment's more certain,
Men venture necks to gain a fortune:
The soldier does it every day,
Eight to the week, for six-pence pay:
Your pettifoggers damn their souls,
To share with knaves in cheating fools:
And merchants, vent'ring through the main,
Slight pirates, rocks, and horns for gain.
This is the way I advise you to,
Trust me, and see what I will do.

Quoth she, I should be loth to run
Myself all th' hazard, and you none;
Which must be done, unless some deed
Of your's aforesaid do precede;
Give but yourself one gentle swing,^1
For trial, and I'll cut the string:
Or give that rev'rend head a maul, Or two, or three, against a wall;
To shew you are a man of mettle,
And I'll engage myself to settle.

---

1 No comparison can be made between the evidence arising from each experiment; for as to venturing necks, it proves no great matter; it is done every day by the soldier, pettifogger, and merchant. If the soldier has only sixpence a day, and one day's pay is reserved weekly for stoppages, he may be said to make eight days to the week; adding that to the account of labour which is deducted from his pay. Percentiniius, the mutinous soldier in Tacitus, seems to have been sensible of some such hardship — Denis in diem assibus animam et corpus æstimari; hinc vestem, arma, tentoria; hinc sævitiam centurionum, et vacationes munerum redimi. Annal. i. 17.

^Eρωτα παύει λιμός, εἰ ἔκ μῆ, χρόνος; ^Eᾱν ἔκ μῆ ἔκ ταύτα τῆν φιλογά σέημην, Θεραπεία σοι το λοιπόν ἤρτησθοι έρόχος.

In Diogenes Laertius cum notis Meibom. p. 356, it is thus printed:

^Ερωτα παύει λιμός, εἰ ἔκ μῆ χρόνος,
Εᾱν ἔκ τούτοις μῆ ἔκ τίνη χρησθαι, βρόχος,

See lines 485 and also 645 of this canto, where the word λιμός is turned into dry diet.
Quoth he, My head's not made of brass,
As Friar Bacon's noodle was;
Nor, like the Indian's skull, so tough,
That, authors say, t'was musket-proof: 1
As it had need to be to enter,
As yet, on any new adventure;
You see what bangs it has endur'd,
That would, before new feats, be cur'd:
But if that's all you stand upon,
Here, strike me luck, it shall be done. 2

Quoth she, The matter's not so far gone
As you suppose, two words t' a bargain;
That may be done, and time enough,
When you have given downright proof:
And yet, 'tis no fantastic pique
I have to love, nor coy dislike;
'Tis no implicit, nice aversion 3
T' your conversation, mien, or person:
But, a just fear, lest you should prove
False and perfidious in love;
For if I thought you could be true,
I could love twice as much as you.

1 "Blockheads and loggerheads are in request in Brazil, and helmets "are of little use, every one having an artificialized natural morion of "his head: for the Brasilians' heads, some of them are as hard as the "wood that grows in their country, for they cannot be broken, and "they have been so hard, that our's, in comparison of their's, are like "a pompion, and when they would injure any white man, they call "him soft head." Bulwer's Artificial Changeling, p. 42. and Purchas's Pilgr. fol. vol. iii. p. 993.

2 Percutere et ferire foedus σπονδέας τημνειν και όρκια. Eurip.

At the conclusion of treaties a beast was generally sacrificed. When butchers and country people make a bargain, one of the parties holds out in his hand a piece of money, which the other strikes, and the bargain is closed. Callimachus Brunck. i. 464. epig. xiv. 5. τετο ὑκω
&c.

[Y. L. Come strike me luck with earnest, and draw the writings.
M. There's a God's penny for thee.
Beaumont and Fletcher.—Scornful Lady. Act. ii.]

3 Implicit here signifies secret, unaccountable, or an aversion conceived from the report of others. See P. i. c. i. v. 130.
Quoth he, My faith, as adamantine
As chains of destiny, I'll maintain;
True as Apollo ever spoke,
Or oracle from heart of oak;¹
And if you'll give my flame but vent,
Now in close hugger-mugger pent,
And shine upon me but benignly,
With that one, and that other pigsney,²
The sun and day shall sooner part,
Than love, or you, shake off my heart:
The sun that shall no more dispense
His own, but your bright influence;
I'll carve your name on barks of trees,³
With true love-knots, and flourishes;
That shall infuse eternal spring,
And everlasting flourishing:

¹ Jupiter's oracle in Epirus, near the city of Dodona, Ubi nemus erat Jovi sacrum querneum totum, in quo Jovis Dodonaei templum fuisse narratur.
² Pigsney is a term of blandishment, from the Anglo-Saxon, or Danish, piga, a pretty girl, or the eyes of a pretty lass: thus in Pembroke's Arcadia, Dametas says to his wife. "Miso, mine own pigsnie." To love one's mistress more than one's eyes, is a phrase used by all nations: thus Moschus in Greek, Catullus in Latin; Spenser, in his Fairy Queen:

— her eyes, sweet smiling in delight,
Moystened their fiery beams, with which she thrill'd
Frael hearts, yet quenched not; like starry light,
Which sparkling on the silent waves, does seem more bright.
Thus the Italian poets, Tasso and Ariosto. Tyrwhitt says, in a note on Chaucer's Miller's Tale, v. 3268, "the Romans used oculus, as a term of endearment; and perhaps pigsnie, in burlesque poetry, means ocellus porci, the eyes of a pig being remarkably small."
³ See Don Quixote, vol. i. ch. 4. and vol. iv. ch. 73.

Populus est, memini, fluviali consita ripa,
Est in qua nostri littera scripta memor.
Popule, vive precor, quae consita margine ripae
Hoc in rugoso cortice carmen habes;
Cum Paris Ænone poterit spirare relicta,
Ad fontem Xanthi versa recurret aqua.

Ovid. Ænone Paridi. 25.

[Run, run, Orlando; carve, on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she.
As you like it.]
Drink every letter on’t in stum,
And make it brisk champaign become;¹
Where’er you tread, your foot shall set
The primrose and the violet;
All spices, perfumes, and sweet powders,
Shall borrow from your breath their odours;
Nature her charter shall renew,
And take all lives of things from you;
The world depend upon your eye,
And when you frown upon it, die.
Only our loves shall still survive,
New worlds and natures to outlive;
And like to herald’s moons, remain
All crescents, without change or wane.

Hold, hold, quoth she, no more of this,
Sir knight, you take your aim amiss;
For you will find it a hard chapter,
To catch me with poetic rapture,
In which your mastery of art
Doth shew itself, and not your heart;

¹ Stum, i. e. any new, thick, unfermented liquor, from the Latin mustum. Dr. Johnson, in his Dictionary, has quoted these lines to prove that stum may signify wine revived by a new fermentation: but, perhaps, it means no more than figuratively to say, that the remembrance of the widow’s charms could turn bad wine into good, foul muddy wine, into clear sparkling champaigne. It was usual, among the gallants of Butler’s time, to drink as many bumpers to their mistresses health, as there were letters in her name. The custom prevailed among the Romans: thus the well known epigram of Martial:
Nævia sex cyathis, septem Justina bibatur,
Quinque Lycas, Lyde quatuor, Ida tribus.—Ep. i. 72.

For every letter drink a glass,
That spells the name you fancy,
Take four, if Suky be your lass,
And five if it be Nancy.
The like compliment was paid to a particular friend or benefactor:
Det numerum cyathis Instanti littera Rufi;
Auctor enim tanti munere ille mihi.—Mart. epig. viii. 51.

Mr. Sandys, in his Travels, says, this custom is still much practised by the merry Greeks, in the Morea, and other parts of the Levant.
Nor will you raise in mine combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian:

In Butler's MS. I find the following lines:

In foreign universities,
When a king's born, or wed, or dies,
All other studies are laid by,
And all apply to poetry.
Some write in Hebrew, some in Greek,
And some, more wise, in Arabic;
T' avoid the critique, and th' expence
Of difficult wit and sense.

Foreign land is often used by Mr. Butler for England. See Genuine Remains.

As no edge can be sharp and keen,
That by the subtlest eye is seen;
So no wit should acute b' allow'd,
That's easy to be understood.

For poet's sing, though more speak plain,
As those that quote their works maintain;
And no man's bound to any thing
He does not say, but only sing.
For, since the good Confessor's time,
No deeds are valid, writ in rhyme;
Nor any held authentic acts,
Seal'd with the tooth upon the wax:
For men did then so freely deal,
Their words were deeds, and teeth a seal.

The following grants are said to be authentic; but whether they are or not, they are probably what the poet alludes to:

Charter of Edmund the Confessor.

IcHE Edward Konyng,
Have geoven of my forest the keeping,
Of the hundred of Chelmer and Dancing, [now Dengy, in Essex.]
To Randolph Peperking, and to his kindling,
With heorte and hynde, doe and bock,
Hare and fox, cat and brock, [badger]
Wild foule with his flocke,
Patrick, fesaunte hen, and fesaunte cock;
With green and wild stobb and stokk, [timber and stubs of trees]
To kepen, and to yeomen by all her might, [their]
Both by day, and eke by night.
And hounds for to holde,
Gode swift and bolde.
Four Greyhounds and six beaches, [bitch hounds]
For hare and fox, and wilde cattes.
And there of ich made him my bocke [i.e. this deed my written Wittenes the Bishop Wolston, evidence.]
And boche ycleped many on. [witness]
And Swyne of Essex, our brother,
And token him many other,
And our steward Howelin
That besought me for him.
She that with poetry is won,
Is but a desk to write upon;
And what men say of her, they mean
No more than that on which they lean.
Some with Arabian spices strive,
T' embalm her cruelly alive;
Or season her, as French cooks use
Their haut-gouts, bouillies, or ragouts;

[Six beaches. — This line, as quoted by Steevens in a note to the Induction to the Taming of the Shrew, runs thus, Four Greyhounds and six bratches, which must be the correct reading, as may be gathered from the following quotations from Minshew and Ducange, unnoticed by the Shakspeare Commentators in their numerous notes on the word, and their doubts on its gender. A brache, a little hound.—Minshew. Bra-
p. 283. Concedo eis 2 leporarios et 4 bracetos ad leporem capiendum.
Constit. Feder. Reg. Sicil. c. 115. Ut, nullus . . . . praesumat canem braccum videlicet, vel leporarium . . . . ulcerius furto subtrahere.]
Bock, in Saxon, is book, or written evidence; this land was therefore held as bocland, a noble tenure in strict entail, that could not be alienated from the right heir.

Hopton, in the County of Salop,

To the Heyrs Male of the Hopton, lawfully begotten.

From me and from myne, to the and to thine,
While the water runs, and the sun doth shine,
For lack of heyrs to the king againe.
I William, king, the third year of my reign,
Give to the Norman hunter,
To me that art both line and deare, [related, or of my lineage]
The Hop and the Hoptoune,
An all the bounds up and downe.
Under the earth to hell,
Above the earth to heaven.
From me, and from myne,
To thee and to thyne;
As good and as faire,
As ever they myne were;
To witness that this is sooth, [true]
I bite the white wax with my tooth,
Before Jugg, Marode, and Margery,
And my third son Henery,
For one bow, and one broad arrow,
When I come to hunt upon Yarrow.

This grant of William the Conqueror, is in John Stow's Chronicle, and in Blount's Antient Tenures. Other rhyming charters may be seen in p. 272.
Use her so barbarously ill,
To grind her lips upon a mill,\(^1\)
Until the facet doublet doth
Fit their rhymes rather than her mouth;\(^2\)
Her mouth compar'd t' an oyster's, with
A row of pearl in't, 'stead of teeth;
Others make posies of her cheeks,
Where red, and whitest colours mix;
In which the lily and the rose,
For Indian lake and ceruse goes.
The sun and moon, by her bright eyes,
Eclips'd and darken'd in the skies;
Are but black patches that she wears,
Cut into suns, and moons, and stars, \(^3\)
By which astrologers, as well
As those in heav'n above, can tell
What strange events they do foreshow,
Unto her under-world below.\(^4\)
Her voice, the music of the spheres,
So loud, it deafens mortal ears;
As wise philosophers have thought,
And that's the cause we hear it not.\(^5\)

\(^1\) As they do by comparing her lips to rubies polished by a mill, which is in effect; and no better, than to grind by a mill, and that until those false stones, (for, when all is done, lips are not true rubies) do plainly appear to have been brought in by them as rather befitting the absurdity of their rhimes, than that there is really any propriety in the compa-

\(^2\) Poets and romance writers have not been very scrupulous in the choice of metaphors, when they represented the beauties of their mistresses. Facets are precious stones, ground à la facette, or with many faces, that they may have the greater lustre. Doublets are crystals joined together with a cement, green or red, in order to resemble stones of that colour.

\(^3\) The ladies formerly were very fond of wearing a great number of black patches on their faces, and, perhaps, might amuse themselves in devising the shape of them. This fashion is alluded to in sir Kenelm Digby's discourse on the sympathetic powder; and ridiculed in the Spectator, No. 50. But the poet here alludes to Dr. Bulwer's Artificial Changeling, p. 252, &c.

\(^4\) A double entendre.

\(^5\) "Pythagoras," saith Censorinus, "asserted, that this world is made
This has been done by some, who those
Th' ador'd in rhyme, would kick in prose;
And in those ribbons would have hung,
Of which melodiously they sung.\(^1\)
That have the hard fate to write best,
Of those that still deserve it least;\(^2\)
It matters not, how false or forc'd,
So the best things be said o' th' worst;
It goes for nothing when 'tis said,
Only the arrow's drawn to th' head,
Whether it be the swan or goose
They level at: so shepherds use
To set the same mark on the hip,
Both of their sound and rotten sheep:
For wits that carry low or wide,
Must be aim'd higher, or beside
The mark, which else they ne'er come nigh,
But when they take their aim awry.\(^3\)

---

1 Thus Waller on a girdle:
   Give me but what this riband bound.
2 Warburton was of opinion that Butler alluded to one of Mr. Waller's poems on Saccharissa, where he complains of her unkindness. Others suppose, that he alludes to Mr. Waller's poems on Oliver Cromwell and King Charles II. The poet's reply to the king, when he reproached him with having written best in praise of Oliver Cromwell, is known to every one. "We poets," says he, "succeed better in fiction than in truth." But this passage seems to relate to ladies and love, not to kings and politics.
3 An allusion to gunnery. In Butler MS. Common-place book are the following lines:
   Ingenuity, or wit,
   Does only th' owner fit
   For nothing, but to be undone.
   For nature never gave to mortal yet,
   A free and arbitrary power of wit:
   But bound him to his good behaviour for't,
   That he should never use it to do hurt.
But I do wonder you should chuse
This way t' attack me with your muse.
As one cut out to pass your tricks on,
With Fulhams of poetic fiction:¹
I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bastings use to prove
The readiest remedies of love,²
Next a dry diet; but if those fail,
Yet this uneasy loop-hol'd jail,
In which y' are hamper'd by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock:
Wedlock, that's worse than any hole here,
If that may serve you for a cooler
T' allay your mettle, all agog
Upon a wife, the heavier clog.
Nor rather thank your gentler fate,³
That, for a bruis'd or broken pate,
Has freed you from those knobs that grow
Much harder on the marry'd brow:
But if no dread can cool your courage,
From vent'ring on that dragon, marriage;
Yet give me quarter, and advance⁴
To nobler aims your puissance;

Wit does but divert men from the road,
In which things vulgarly are understood;
Favours mistake, and ignorance, to own
A better sense than commonly is known.
Most men are so unjust, they look upon
Another's wit as enemy t' their own.

¹ That is, with cheats or impositions. Fulham was a cant word for a false die, many of them being made at that place. The high dice were loaded so as to come up 4, 5, 6, and the low ones 1, 2, 3. Frequently mentioned in Butler's Genuine Remains.
² Ἐπωτὰ παίς λυμός, &c. See note on line 525.
³ That is, and not rather: this depends upon v. 639, 40, 41, 42. All the intermediate verses from thence to this being, as it were, in a parenthesis: the sense is, But I do wonder — t' attack me, and should not rather thank —
⁴ The widow here pretends, she would have him quit his pursuit of her, and aim higher; namely, at beauty and wit.
Level at beauty and at wit;
The fairest mark is easiest hit. 1

Quoth Hudibras, I am beforehand
In that already, with your command; 2
For where does beauty and high wit
But in your constellation meet?

Quoth she, What does a match imply,
But likeness and equality?
I know you cannot think me fit
To be th' yokefellow of your wit;
Nor take one of so mean deserts,
To be the partner of your parts;
A grace which, if I cou'd believe,
I've not the conscience to receive. 3

That conscience, quoth Hudibras,
Is misinform'd; I'll state the case.
A man may be a legal donor
Of any thing whereof he's owner,
And may confer it where he lists,
I' th' judgment of all casuists:
Then wit, and parts, and valour may
Be ali'nated, and made away,
By those that are proprietors,
As I may give or sell my horse.

1 The reader will observe the ingenious equivocation, or the double meaning of the word fairest.
2 Where one word ends with a vowel, and the next begins with a w, immediately followed by a vowel, or where one word ends with w, immediately preceded by a vowel, and the next begins with a vowel, the poet either leaves them as two syllables, or contracts them into one, as best suits his verse; thus in the passage before us, and in P. iii. c. i. v. 1561, and P. iii. c. ii. v. 339, these are contractions in the first case; and P. iii. c. i. v. 804. in the latter case.
3 Our poet uses the word conscience here as a word of two syllables, and in the next line as a word of three; thus in Part i. c. i. v. 78. ratio-cination is a word of five syllables, and in other places of four: in the first it is a treble rhyme. [In the first instance, conscience, means only self-opinion; in the second Hudibras marks it as meaning knowledge by making it a trisyllable (conscience), and places it in ludicrous opposi-
Quoth she, I grant the case is true,
And proper 'twixt your horse and you;
But whether I may take, as well
As you may give away, or sell?
Buyers, you know, are bid beware;
And worse than thieves receivers are.
How shall I answer hue and cry,
For a roan-gelding, twelve hands high, ¹
All spurr'd and switch'd, a lock on's hoof, ²
A sorrel mane? Can I bring proof
Where, when, by whom, and what y' are sold for,
And in the open market toll'd for?
Or, should I take you for a stray,
You must be kept a year and day,
Ere I can own you, here i' th' pound,
Where, if ye're sought, you may be found;
And in the mean time I must pay
For all your provender and hay.

Quoth he, It stands me much upon
T' enervate this objection,
And prove myself, by topic clear,
No gelding, as you would infer.
Loss of virility's avert'd
To be the cause of loss of beard, ³
That does, like embryo in the womb,
Abortive on the chin become:
This first a woman did invent,
In envy of man's ornament:

¹ This is a severe reflection upon the knight's abilities, his complexion, and his height, which the widow intimates was not more than four feet.
² There is humour in the representation which the widow makes of the knight, under the similitude of a roan gelding, supposed to be stolen, or to have strayed. Farmers often put locks on the fore-feet of their horses, to prevent their being stolen.
³ See the note on line 144 of this canto.
Semiramis of Babylon,
Who first of all cut men o' th' stone, 1
To mar their beards, and laid foundation
Of sow-geldering operation:
Look on this beard, and tell me whether Eunuchs wear such, or geldings either?
Next it appears I am no horse,
That I can argue and discourse,
Have but two legs, and ne'er a tail.
Quoth she, That nothing will avail;
For some philosophers of late here,
Write men have four legs by nature, 2
And that 'tis custom makes them go
Erroneously upon but two;
As 'twas in Germany made good,
B' a boy that lost himself in a wood;
And growing down t' a man, was wont
With wolves upon all four to hunt.
As for your reasons drawn from tails, 3
We cannot say they're true or false,
Till you explain yourself, and show
B' experiment, 'tis so or no.
Quoth he, If you'll join issue on't, 4
I'll give you sat'sfact'ry account;

1 Mr Butler, in his own note, says, Semiramis teneros mares castra-vit omnium prima, and quotes Ammian. Marcellinus. But the poet means to laugh at Dr. Bulwer, who in his Artificial Changeling, scene 21. has many strange stories; and in page 208, says, "Nature gave to "mankind a beard, that it might remain an index in the face of the "masculine generative faculty."

2 Sir Kenelm Digby, in his book of Bodies, has the well known story of the wild German boy, who went on all four, was overgrown with hair, and lived among the wild beasts, the credibility and truth of which he endeavours to establish. See also Tatler, No. 103. Some modern writers are said to have the same conceit. The second line here quoted seems to want half a foot, but it may be made right by the old way of spelling four, fower, or reading as in the edition of 1709;
Write that men have four legs by nature:

3 See Fontaine, Conte de la jument du compere Pierre.

4 That is, rest the cause upon this point.
So you will promise, if you lose,
To settle all, and be my spouse.
That never shall be done, quoth she,
To one that wants a tail, by me;
For tails by nature sure were meant,
As well as beards, for ornament;¹
And tho’ the vulgar count them homely;
In men or beast they are so comely,
So gentee, alamode, and handsome,
I’ll never marry man that wants one:
And ’till you can demonstrate plain,
You have one equal to your mane,
I’ll be torn piece-meal by a horse,
Ere I’ll take you for better or worse.
The Prince of Cambay’s daily food
Is asp, and basilisk, and toad,²
Which makes him have so strong a breath,
Each night he stinks a queen to death;
Yet I shall rather lie in’s arms
Than your’s, on any other terms.
Quoth he, What nature can afford
I shall produce, upon my word;
And if she ever gave that boon
To man, I’ll prove that I have one;

¹ Mr. Butler here alludes to Dr. Bulwer’s Artificial Changeling, p. 410., where, besides the story of the Kentish men near Rochester, he gives an account, from an honest young man of captain Morris’s company, in lieutenant-general irton’s regiment, “that at Cashell, in the county of Tipperary, in the province of Munster, in Carrick Patrick church, seated on a rock, stormed by lord Inchequin, where there were near 700 put to the sword, and none saved but the mayor’s wife and his son; there were found among the slain of the Irish, when they were stripped, diverse that had tails near a quarter of a yard long: forty soldiers, that were eye-witnesses, testified the same upon their oaths.” He mentions likewise a similar tale of many other nations.
I mean, by postulate illation,¹
When you shall offer just occasion;
But since ye've yet deny'd to give
My heart, your pris'n' er, a reprieve,
But made it sink down to my heel,
Let that at least your pity feel;
And for the sufferings of your martyr,
Give its poor entertainer quarter;
And by discharge, or mainprise, grant
Deliv'ry from this base restraint.

Quoth she, I grieve to see your leg
Stuck in a hole here like a peg,
And if I knew which way to do't,
Your honour safe, I'd let you out.
That dames by jail-delivery
Of errant knights have been set free,²
When by enchantment they have been,
And sometimes for it too, laid in,
Is that which knights are bound to do
By order, oaths, and honour too;³
For what are they renown'd and famous else,
But aiding of distressed damosels?
But for a lady, no ways errant,
To free a knight, we have no warrant
In any authentical romance,
Or classic author yet of France;⁴

¹ That is, by inference, necessary consequence, or presumptive evidence.
² These and the following lines are a banter upon romance writers. Our author keeps Don Quixote constantly in his eye, when he is aiming at this object. In Europe, the Spaniards and the French engaged first in this kind of writing: from them it was communicated to the English.
³ Their oath was—Vous défendrez les querelles justes de toutes les dames d'honneur, de toutes les veuves qui n'ont point des amis, des orphelins, et des filles dont la réputation est entière.
⁴ In the Comitia Centuriata of the Romans, the class of nobility and senators voted first, and all the other persons where stiled infra classem. Hence their writers of the firat rank were called classics.
And I'd be loth to have you break
An ancient custom for a freak,
Or innovation introduce
In place of things of antique use,
To free your heels by any course,
That might b' unwholesome to your spurs: 1
Which if I could consent unto,
It is not in my pow'r to do;
For 'tis a service must be done ye
With solemn previous ceremony;
Which always has been us'd t' untie
The charms of those who here do lie;
For as the ancients heretofore
To honour's temple had no door,
But that which thorough virtue's lay; 2
So from this dungeon there's no way
To honour's freedom, but by passing
That other virtuous school of lashing,
Where knights are kept in narrow lists,
With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists;
In which they for a while are tenants,
And for their ladies suffer penance:
Whipping, that's virtue's governess,
Tutress of arts and sciences;
That mends the gross mistakes of nature,
And puts new life into dull matter;
That lays foundation for renown,
And all the honours of the gown.
This suffer'd, they are set at large,
And freed with hon'rable discharge;
Then, in their robes, the penitentials
Are straight presented with credentials, 3

---

1 To your honour. The spurs are badges of knighthood. If a knight of the garter is degraded, his spurs must be hacked to pieces by the king's cook.
2 The temple of Virtue and Honour was built by Marius; the architect was Mutius; it had no posticum. See Vitruvius, &c.
3 This alludes to the acts of parliament, 33 Eliz. cap. 4. and 1 James
And in their way attended on
By magistrates of every town;
And, all respect and charges paid,
They're to their ancient seats convey'd.
Now if you'll venture for my sake,
To try the toughness of your back,
And suffer, as the rest have done,
The laying of a whipping on,
And may you prosper in your suit,
As you with equal vigour do't,
I here engage to be your bail,
And free you from th' unknighthly jail:
But since our sex's modesty
Will not allow I should be by,
Bring me, on oath, a fair account,
And honour to, when you have done't;
And I'll admit you to the place
You claim as due in my good grace.
If matrimony and hanging go
By dest'ny, why not whipping too?
What med'cine else can cure the fits
Of lovers, when they lose their wits?
Love is a boy by poets styl'd,
Then spare the rod, and spoil 1 the child:
A Persian emp'r'or whipp'd his grannum,
The sea, his mother Venus came on; 2

---

1. c. 31. whereby vagrants are ordered to be whipped, and, with a proper certificate, conveyed by the constables of the several parishes to the place of their settlement. These acts are in a great measure repealed by the 12th of Anne. Explained, amended, and repealed, by the 10th, 13th, and 17th George II.

1 Spot, or spill, as in some copies, from the Saxon, is frequently used by Chaucer, in the sense of, to ruin, to destroy.

2 Xerxes whipped the sea, which was the mother of Venus, and Venus was the mother of Cupid; the sea, therefore, was the grannum, or grand-mother of Cupid, and the object of imperial flagellation, when the winds and the waves were not favourable and propitious to his fleets.

In Corum atque Eurus solitus saevire flagellis
And hence some rev'rend men approve
Of rosemary in making love. 1
As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubs, 2
Why may not whipping have as good
A grace, perform'd in time and mood,
With comely movement, and by art,
Raise passion in a lady's heart?
It is an easier way to make

Love by, than that which many take.
Who would not rather suffer whipping,
Than swallow toasts of bits of ribbin? 3
Make wicked verses, traits, 4 and faces,
And spell names over with beer-glasses? 5
Be under vows to hang and die
Love's sacrifice, and all a lie?
With China-oranges and tarts,
And whining-plays, lay baits for hearts?
Bribe chambermaids with love and money,
To break no roguish jests upon ye; 6

1 Venus came from the sea; hence the poet supposes some connection with the word rosemary, or rosmarins, dew of the sea. Rev'rend in the preceding line means ancient or old: it is used in this sense by Pope, in his Epistles to lord Cobham, v. 232. Reverend age occurs in Waller, ed. Fenton, p. 56. and in this Poem., P. ii. c. i. v. 527.

2 Coopers, like blacksmiths, give to their work alternately an heavy stroke and a light one: which our poet humorously compares to the Lydian and Phrygian measures. The former was soft and effeminate, and called by Aristotle moral, because it settled and composed the affections; the latter was rough and martial, and termed enthusiastic, because it agitated the passions:

Et Phrygio stimulet numero cava tibia mentes. Lucr. ii. 620.
Phrygiis cantibus incitantur. Cic. de Div. i. 114.
And all the while sweet music did divide
Her looser notes with Lydian harmony.

3 These and the following lines afford a curious specimen of the follies practiced by inamoratos.

4 Trait is a word rarely used in English, of French origin, signifying a stroke, or turn of wit or fancy.

5 This kind of transmutation Mr. Butler, is often guilty of: he means, scribble the beer-glasses over with the name of his sweetheart, [rather spells them in the number of glasses of beer, as before at v. 570.]

6 Sed prius ancillam eaptandæ nosse puellæ
For lilies limn'd on cheeks, and roses,
With painted perfumes, hazard noses?
Or, vent'ring to be brisk and wanton,
Do penance in a paper lanthorn?
All this you may compound for now,
By suff'ring what I offer you;
Which is no more than has been done
By knights for ladies long agone.
Did not the great La Mancha do so
For the Infanta Del Toboso?
Did not th' illustrious Bassa make Himself a slave for Misse's sake?
And with bull's pizzle, for her love,
Was taw'd as gentle as a glove?
Was not young Florio sent, to cool
His flame for Biancafiore, to school,

Cura sit : accessus moliat illa tuos.
Proxima consiliis dominae sit ut illa videto;
Neve parum tacitis conscia fida jocis.

Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. i. 351:

1 Their perfumes and paints were more prejudicial than the rouge and odours of modern times. They were used by lops and coxcombs as well as by women. The plain meaning of the distich is, venture disease for painted and perfumed whores.

2 Alluding to a method of cure for the venereal disease: and it may point equivocally to some part of the presbyterian or popish discipline.

3 Meaning the penance which Don Quixote underwent for the sake of his Dulcinea, Part i. book iii. ch. 2.

4 Ibrahim, the illustrious Bassa, in the romance of Monsieur Scudery. His mistress, Isabella, princess of Monaco, being conveyed away to the Sultan's seraglio, he gets into the palace in quality of a slave, and, after a multitude of adventures, becomes grand vizier.

5 To taw is a term used by leather-dressers, signifying to soften the leather, and make it pliable, by frequently rubbing it. So in Ben Jonson's Alchemist, "Be curry'd, claw'd, and flaw'd, and taw'd indeed." In the standard of antient weights and measures, we read: "The cyse of a tanner that he tanne ox leather, and netes, and calves:—the cyse of a tawyer, that he shall tawe none but shopes leather and deres." So the tawer, or fell-monger, prepares soft supple leather, as of buck, doe, kid, sheep, lamb, for gloves, &c. which preparation of tawing differs much from tanning. Johnson, in his dictionary, says, "To taw is to dress white leather, commonly called alum leather, in "contradistinction from tan leather, that which is dressed with bark."

[To beat and dress leather with alum.

Nares.]

6 This she instances from an Italian romance, entitled Florio and Bi-Where pedant made his pathic bum
For her sake suffer martyrdom?
Did not a certain lady whip,
Of late, her husband's own lordship? 1
And, tho' a grandee of the house,
Claw'd him with fundamental blows;
Ty'd him stark naked to a bed-post,
And firk'd his hide, as if sh' had rid post;
And after in the sessions court,
Where whipping's judg'd, had honour for't?
This swear you will perform, and then
I'll set you from th' enchanted den,
And the magician's circle, clear.
Quoth he, I do profess and swear, ancafiore. Thus the lady mentions some illustrious examples of the three nations, Spanish, French, and Italian, to induce the knight to give himself a scourging, according to the established laws of chivalry and novelism. The adventures of Florio and Biancafiore, which make the principal subject of Boccace's Philocopo, were famous long before Boccace, as he himself informs us. Floris and Blancaster are mentioned as illustrious lovers, by a Languedocian poet, in his Breviari d' Amor, dated in the year 1288: it is probable, however, that the story was enlarged by Boccace. See Tyrwhitt on Chaucer, iv. 169.

1 Lord Munson, of Bury St. Edmund's, one of the king's judges, being suspected by his lady of changing his political principles, was by her, together with the assistance of her maids, tied naked to the bed-post, and whipped till he promised to behave better. Sir William Waller's lady, Mrs. May, and Sir Henry Mildmay's lady, were supposed to have exercised the same authority. See History of Flagellants, p. 340. 8vo. I meet with the following lines in Butler's MS. Common-place book:

Bees are governed in a monarchy,
By some more noble female bee.
For females never grow effeminate,
As men prove often, and subvert a state.
For as they take to men, and men to them,
It is the safest in the worst extrem.
The Gracchi were more resolute and stout,
Who only by their mother had been taught.

The ladies on both sides were very active during the civil wars; they held their meetings, at which they encouraged one another in their zeal. Among the MSS. in the museum at Oxford is one entitled Dis-verse remarkable Orders of the Ladies, at the Spring-garden, in parliament assembled: together with certain votes of the unlawful assembly at Kate's, in Covent-garden, both sent abroad to prevent misinformation.
Vesper. Veneris Martii 25, 1647. One of the orders is: "That where-
And will perform what you enjoin,
Or may I never see you mine.
    Amen, quoth she, then turn'd about,
And bid her squire let him out.
But ere an artist could be found
T'o undo the charms another bound,
The sun grew low, and left the skies,
Put down, some write, by ladies' eyes.
The moon pull'd off her veil of light,
That hides her face by day from sight.
Mysterious veil, of brightness made,
That's both her lustre and her shade,
And in the night as freely shone,
As if her rays had been her own:
For darkness is the proper sphere
Where all false glories use t'o appear.
The twinkling stars began to muster,
And glitter with their borrow'd lustre,
While sleep the weary'd world reliev'd,
By counterfeiting death reviv'd.

"as the lady Norton, doorkeeper of this house, complayned of sir Robert Harley, a member of the house of commons, for attempting to deface her, which happened thus: the said lady being a zealous independent, and fond of the saints, and sir Robert Harley having found that she was likewise painted, he pretended that she came within his ordinance against idolatry, saints painted, crosses, &c. but some friends of the said door-keeper urging in her behalf, that none did ever yet attempt to adore her, or worship her, she was justified, and the house hereupon declared, that if any person, by virtue of any power whatever, pretended to be derived from the house of commons, or any other court, shall go about to impeach, hinder, or disturb any lady from painting, worshipping, or adorning herself to the best advantage, as also from planting of hairs, or investing of teeth," &c. &c. Another order in this mock parliament was, that they send a messenger to the assembly of divines, to enquire what is meant by the words due evenience.
1 This, and the eleven following lines, are very just and beautiful.
2 The rays of the sun obscure the moon by day, and enlighten it by ight. This passage is extremely beautiful and poetical, shewing, among many others, Mr. Butler's powers in serious poetry, if he had chosen that path.
3 There is a beautiful modern epigram, which I do not correctly remember, or know where to find. It runs nearly thus:
Our vot’ry though it best t’ adjourn
His whipping penance till the morn,
And not to carry on a work
Of such importance, in the dark,
With erring haste, but rather stay,
And do’t i’ th’ open face of day;
And in the mean time go in quest
Of next retreat, to take his rest.

Somne levis, quanquam certissima mortis imago,
Consortem cupio te tamen esse tori.
Alma quies optata veni, nam sic sine vitâ
Vivere quam suave est, sic sine morte mori.

υπνος τὰ μικρὰ τοῦ θανάτου μυτίρια.
Gnomici Poetæ, 915. 243.

υπνος βραχεῖς παυτήρ πόνων.
Athenæ. l. x. p. 449.

υπνος πέφυκε σώματος σωτηρία.

This canto in general is inimitable for wit and pleasantry: the character of Hudibras is well preserved; his manner of address appears to be natural, and at the same time has strong marks of singularity. Towards the conclusion, indeed, the conversation becomes obscene; but, excepting this blemish, I think the whole canto by no means inferior to any part of the performance. The critic will remark how exact our poet is in observing times and seasons; he describes morning and evening; and one day only is passed since the opening of the poem.
HUDIBRAS.

PART II. CANTO II.
ARGUMENT.

The Knight and Squire in hot dispute,
Within an ace of falling out,
Are parted with a sudden fright
Of strange alarm, and stranger sight;
With which adventuring to stickle,
They're sent away in nasty pickle.
CANTO II.

'Tis strange how some men's tempers suit
Like bawd and brandy, with dispute, ¹
That for their own opinions stand fast,
Only to have them claw'd and canvast.
That keep their consciences in cases, ²
As fiddlers do their crowds and bases, ³
Ne'er to be us'd but when they're bent
To play a fit for argument. ⁴
Make true and false, unjust and just,
Of no use but to be discust;
Dispute and set a paradox,
Like a straight boot, upon the stocks,

¹ That is, how some men love disputing, as a bawd loves brandy.
² A pun or jeu de mots, on cases of conscience.
³ That is, their fiddles and violoncellos.
⁴ The old phrase was, to play a fit of mirth: the word fit often occurs in ancient ballads, and metrical romances: it is generally applied to music, and signifies a division or part, for the convenience of the performers; thus in the old poem of John the Reeve, the first part ends with this line,
And stretch it more unmercifully,
Than Helmont, Montaigne, White or Tully. 1
So th' ancient Stoics in the porch,
With fierce dispute maintain'd their church,

The first fitt here find we;
afterwards it signified the whole part or division: thus Chaucer concludes the rhymne of Sir Thopas:
  Lo! lordes min. here is a fitt;
  If ye will any more of it,
  To tell it woll I fond.

The learned and ingenous Bishop of Dromore, (Dr. Percy) thinks the word fit, originally signified a poetic strain, verse, or poem.

1 Men are too apt to subtilize when they labour in defence of a favourite sect or system. Van Helmont was an eminent physician and naturalist, a warm opposer of the principles of Aristotle and Galen, and unreasonably attached to chymistry. He was born at Brussels, in 1588, and died 1664. Michael de Montaigne was born at Perigord, of a good family, 1533, died 1592. He was fancifully educated by his father, waked every morning with instruments of music, taught Latin by conversation and Greek as an amusement. His paradoxes related only to common life; for he had little depth of learning. His essays contain abundance of whimsical reflections on matters of ordinary occurrence, especially upon his own temper and qualities. He was counsellor in the parliament of Bourdeaux, and mayor of the same place. Thomas White was second son of Richard White, of Essex, esquire, by Mary his wife, daughter of Edmund Plowden, the great lawyer, in the reign of Elizabeth.
He was a zealous champion for the church of Rome and the Aristotelian philosophy. He wrote against Joseph Glanville, who printed in London, 1665, a book entitled, Scepis Scientifica, or Confessed Ignorance the Way to Science. Mr. White's answer which defended Aristotle and his disciples, was entitled Seire, sive Scepticas et Scepticorum a jure Disputationis exclusio. This produced a reply from Glanville, under the title of, Seire tuum nihil est. White published several books with the signatures of Thomas Albius, or Thomas Anglus ex Albis. His dialogues de Mundo, bear date 1642, and are signed, autore Thoma Anglo e generosâ Albiorum in oriente Trinobantum prosapia oriundo. He embraced the opinions of Sir Kenelm Digby. For Tully some editions read Lully.
Raymond Lully was a Majorcan, born in the thirteenth century. He is said to have been extremely dissolute in his youth; to have turned sober at forty; in his old age to have preached the Gospel to the Saracens, and suffered martyrdom, anno 1315. As to his paradoxes, prodiit, says Sanderson, e media barbaric vir magna professus, R. Lullus, qui opus logicum quàm speciosum titulo insignivit, artem magnam commentus: cujus ope pollicetur trimestri spatio hominem, quamvis vel ipsa literarum ele-menta nescientem, totam encyclopaediam perdocere; idque per circulos et triangulos, et literas alphabeti sursum versum revolutas. There is a summary of his scheme in Gassendus de Usu Logice, c. 8. Alsted Encyclop. tom. iv. sect. 17. He is frequently mentioned in Butler's Remains see vol. i. 131, and in the character of an hermetic philosopher, vol. ii. p.
232, 247-251. But I have retained the word Tully with the author's corrected edition. Mr Butler alluded, I suppose, to Cicero's Stoicorum JOHN BAPTIST VAN HELMONT.

From a portrait in his "Works," 1662.
Beat out their brains in fight and study,
To prove that virtue is a body, ¹
That bonum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemic brawl:
In which some hundreds on the place
Were slain outright, ² and many a face
Retrench’d of nose, and eyes, and beard,
To maintain what their sect averr’d.
All which the knight and squire in wrath,
Had like t’ have suffer’d for their faith;

Paradoxa, in which, merely for the exercise of his wit, and to amuse himself and his friends, he has undertaken to defend some of the most extravagant doctrines of the porch: Ego vero illa ipsa, quae vix in gymnasium et in otio stoici probant, ludens conjici in communes locos.

¹ The stoics allowed of no incorporeal substance, no medium between body and nothing. With them accidents and qualities, virtues and vices, the passions of the mind, and every thing else, was body. Animam constat animal esse, cum ipsa efficit ut simus animalia. Virtus autem nihil aliud est quam animus taliter se habens. Ergo animal est. See also Seneca, epistle 113. and Plutarch on Superstition, sub initio.

² We meet with the same account in the Remains, vol. ii. 242. "This had been an excellent course for the old round-headed stoics to find out whether bonum was corpus, or virtue an animal: about which they had so many fierce encounters in their stoa, that about 1400 lost their lives on the place, and far many more their beards and teeth and noses." The Grecian history, I believe, does not countenance these remarks. Diogenes Laertius, in his life of Zeno, book vii. sect. 5, says, that this philosopher read his lectures in the stoa or portico, and hopes the place would be no more violated by civil seditions: for, adds he, when the thirty tyrants governed the republic, 1400 citizens were killed there. Making no mention of a philosophical brawl, but speaking of a series of civil executions, which took place in the ninety-fourth olympiad, at least an hundred years before the foundation of the stoical school. In the old annotations, the words of Laertius are cited differently. "In portico (stocorum schola Athenis) disciporum seditionibus, mille quadreringenque trigeinta civis interfeci sunt." But from whence the words "disciporum seditionibus" were picked up, I know not: unless from the old version of Ambrosius of Camaldoli. There is nothing to answer them in the Greek, nor do they appear in the translations of Aldobrandus or Meibomius. Xenophon observes, that more persons were destroyed by the tyranny of the thirty, than had been slain by the enemy in eight entire years of the Peloponnesian war. Both Isocrates and Æschines makes the number fifteen hundred. Seneca De Tranquil. thirteen hundred. Lysias reports, that three hundred were condemned by one sentence. Laertius is the only writer that represents the portico as the scene of their sufferings. This, it is true, stood in the centre of Athens, in, or near, the forum. Perhaps, also, it might not be far from the desmoterion, or prison.
Each striving to make good his own,
As by the sequel shall be shown.

The sun had long since, in the lap
Of Thetis, taken out his nap,
And like a lobster boil'd, the morn
From black to red began to turn;
When Hudibras, whom thoughts and aching
'Twixt sleeping kept all night and waking,
Began to rouse his drowsy eyes,
And from his couch prepar'd to rise;
Resolving to dispatch the deed
He vow'd to do with trusty speed:
But first, with knocking loud and bawling,
He rous'd the squire, in truckle lolling;
And after many circumstances,
Which vulgar authors in romances,
Do use to spend their time and wits on,
To make impertinent description,
They got, with much ado, to horse,
And to the castle bent their course,
In which he to the dame before
To suffer whipping-duty swore:
Where now arriv'd, and half unharnest,
To carry on the work in earnest,
He stopp'd and paus'd upon the sudden,
And with a serious forehead plodding,
Sprung a new scruple in his head,
Which first he scratch'd, and after said;
Whether it be direct infringing
An oath, if I should wave this swinging,

---

1 Mr. M. Bacon says, this simile is taken from Rabelais, who calls the lobster cardinalized, from the red habit assumed by the clergy of that rank.
2 See Don Quixote, Part ii. ch. 20. A truckle-bed is a little bed on wheels, which runs under a larger bed.
3 In some of the early editions, it is duty swore, the sense being in which he before swore to the dame to suffer whipping duly.
4 From the Anglo-Saxon word swingan, to beat, or whip.
And what I've sworn to bear, forbear,
And so b' equivocation swear; 1
Or whether 't be a lesser sin
To be forsworn, than act the thing,
Are deep and subtle points, which must,
T' inform my conscience, be discust;
In which to err a tittle may
To errors infinite make way:
And therefore I desire to know
Thy judgment, ere we further go.

Quoth Ralpho, Since you do injoin't,
I shall enlarge upon the point;
And, for my own part, do not doubt
Th' affirmative may be made out.
But first, to state the case aright,
For best advantage of our light;
And thus 'tis, whether 't be a sin,
To claw and curry our own skin,
Greater or less than to forbear,
And that you are forsworn forswear.
But first, o' th' first: The inward man,
And outward, like a clan and clan,
Have always been at daggers-drawing
And one another clapper-clawing: 2
Not that they really cuff or fence,
But in a spiritual mystic sense;
Which to mistake, and make them squabble,
In literal fray's abominable;

1 The equivocations and mental reservations of the jesuits were loudly complained of and by none more than by the sectaries. When these last came into power, the royalists had too often an opportunity of bringing the same charge against them. See Sanderson De Jur. Oblig. pr. ii. 55. 11.

2 The clans or tribes of the Highlanders of Scotland, have sometimes kept up an hereditary prosecution of their quarrels for many generations. The doctrine which the independents and other sectaries held, concerning the inward and outward man, is frequently alluded to, and frequently explained, in these notes.
'Tis heathenish, in frequent use,
With Pagans and apostate Jews,
To offer sacrifice of bridewells, ¹
Like modern Indians to their idols; ²
And mongrel Christian of our times,
That expiate less with greater crimes,
And call the foul abomination,
Contrition and mortification.
Is't not enough we're bruis'd and kicked,
With sinful members of the wicked;
Our vessels, that are sanctify'd,
Profan'd and curry'd back and side;
But we must claw ourselves with shameful
And heathen stripes, by their example?
Which, were there nothing to forbid it,
Is impious, because they did it:
This therefore may be justly reckon'd
A heinous sin. Now to the second;
That Saints may claim a dispensation
To swear and forswear on occasion,
I doubt not but it will appear
With pregnant light: the point is clear.
Oaths are but words, and words but wind,
Too feeble implements to bind;
And holds with deeds proportion, so
As shadows to a substance do. ³
Then when they strive for place, 'tis fit
The weaker vessel should submit.
Although your church be opposite
To ours, as Black Friars are to White,
In rule and order, yet I grant
You are a reformado saint; ⁴

¹ Whipping, the punishment usually inflicted in houses of correction.
² That is, the fakirs, dervises, bonzes, of the east.
³ Ἄγος ἐργον σκιά, was an aphorism of Democritus.
⁴ That is, a saint volunteer, as being a presbyterian, for the independents were the saints in pay. See P. iii. c. ii. l. 91.
And what the saints do claim as due,
You may pretend a title to:
But saints, whom oaths or vows oblige,
Know little of their privilege;
Further, I mean, than carrying on
Some self-advantage of their own:
For if the devil, to serve his turn,
Can tell truth; why the saints should scorn,
When it serves theirs, to swear and lie,
I think there's little reason why:
Else 'tis has a greater power than they,
Which 'twere impiety to say.
We're not commanded to forbear,
Indefinitely, at all to swear;
But to swear idly, and in vain,
Without self-interest or gain.
For breaking of an oath and lying,
Is but a kind of self-denying,
A saint-like virtue; and from hence
Some have broke oaths by providence:
Some, to the glory of the Lord,
Perjur'd themselves, and broke their word: ¹
And this the constant rule and practice
Of all our late apostles' acts is.
Was not the cause at first begun
With perjury, and carried on?

¹ Dr. Owen had a wonderful knack of attributing all the proceedings of his own party to the direction of the spirit. "The rebel army," says South, "in their several treatings with the king, being asked by him "whether they would stand to such and such agreements and promises, "still answered, that they would do as the spirit should direct them. "Whereupon that blessed prince would frequently condole his hard fate, "that he had to do with persons to whom the spirit dictated one thing "one day, and commanded the clean contrary the next." So the history of independency: when it was first moved in the house of commons to proceed capitally against the king, Cromwell stood up, and told them, that if any man moved this with design, he should think him the greatest traitor in the world; but, since providence and necessity had cast them upon it, he should pray God to bless their counsels. Harrison, Carew, and others, when tried for the part they took in the king's death, professed they had acted out of conscience to the Lord.
Was there an oath the godly took,
But in due time and place they broke?
Did we not bring our oaths in first,
Before our plate, to have them burst,
And cast in fitter models, for
The present use of church and war?
Did not our worthies of the house,
Before they broke the peace, break vows?
For having freed us first from both
Th' alleg'ance and suprem'cy oath,¹
Did they not next compel the nation
To take, and break the protestation?²
To swear, and after to recant,
The solemn league and covenant?³

¹ Though they did not in formal and express terms abrogate these oaths till after the king's death, yet in effect they vacated and annulled them, by administering the king's power, and substituting other oaths, protestations, and covenants. Of these last it is said in the Icon Basili, whoever was the author of it, " Every man soon grows his own pope and easily absolves himself from those ties, which not the command of God's word, or the laws of the land, but only the subtily and terror of a party cast upon them. Either superfluous and vain, when they are sufficiently tied before; or fraudulent and injurious, if by such after ligaments they find the impostors really aiming to dissolve or suspend their former just and necessary obligations."

² In the protestation they promised to defend the true reformed religion, expressed in the doctrine of the church of England; which yet in the covenant, not long after, they as religiously vowed to change.

³ And to recant is but to cant again, says sir Robert L'Estrange. In the solemn league and covenant (called a league, because it was to be a bond of amity and confederation between the kingdoms of England and Scotland; and the covenant, because they pretended to make a covenant with God) they swore to defend the person and authority of the king, and cause the world to behold their fidelity; and that they would not, in the least, diminish his just power and greatness. The presbyterians, who in some instances stuck to the covenant, contrived an evasion for this part of it: viz. that they had sworn to defend the person and authority of the king in support of religion and public liberty. Now, said they, we find that the defence of the person and authority of the king is incompatible with the support of religion and liberty, and therefore, for the sake of religion and liberty, we are bound to oppose and ruin the king. But the independents, who were at last the prevailing party, utterly renounced the covenant. Mr. Goodwin, one of their most eminent preachers, asserted, that to violate this abominable and cursed oath, out of conscience to God, was an holy and blessed perjury.
To take th' engagement, and disclaim it, 1
Enforc'd by those who first did frame it?
Did they not swear, at first, to fight  2
For the king's safety, and his right?
And after march'd to find him out,
And charg'd him home with horse and foot?
And yet still had the confidence
To swear it was in his defence?
Did they not swear to live and die
With Essex, and straight laid him by?  3
If that were all, for some have swore
As false as they, if th' did no more.  4
Did they not swear to maintain law,
In which that swearing made a flaw?
For protestant religion vow,
That did that vowing disallow?
For privilege of parliament,
In which that swearing made a rent?

---

1 After the death of the king a new oath was prepared, which they call the Engagement: the form whereof was, that every man should engage and swear to be true and faithful to the government then established.

2 Cromwell, though in general an hypocrite, was very sincere when he first mustered his troop, and declared that he would not deceive them by perplexed or involved expressions, in his commission, to fight for king and parliament; but he would as soon discharge his pistol upon the king as upon any other person.

3 When the parliament first took up arms, and the earl of Essex was chosen general, several members of the house stood up, and declared that they would live and die with the earl of Essex. This was afterward the usual style of addresses to parliament, and of their resolutions. Essex continued in great esteem with the party till September, 1644, when he was defeated by the king, in Cornwall. But the principal occasion of his being laid aside, was the subtle practice of Cromwell, who in a speech to the house, had thrown out some oblique reflections on the second fight near Newbery, and the loss of Donington castle; and, fearing the resentment of Essex, contrived to pass the self-denying ordinance, whereby Essex, as general, and most of the presbyterians in office, were removed. The presbyterians in the house were superior in number, and thought of new-modelling the army again: but in the mean time the earl died.

4 Essex, it was loudly said by many of his friends, was poisoned. Clarendon's History, vol. iii. b. 10.
And since, of all the three, not one
Is left in being, 'tis well known. 1
Did they not swear, in express words,
To prop and back the house of lords? 2
And after turn'd out the whole house-full
Of peers, as dang'rous and useless.
So Cromwell, with deep oaths and vows,
Swore all the commons out o' th' house; 3
Vow'd that the red-coats would disband,
Ay, marry wou'd they, at their command;
And troll'd them on, and swore and swore,
Till th' army turn'd them out of door.
This tells us plainly what they thought,
That oaths and swearing go for nought;

1 Namely, law, religion, and privilege of parliament.
2 When the army began to present criminal information against the king, in order to keep the lords quiet, who might well be supposed to be in fear for their own privileges and honours, a message was sent to them, promising to maintain their privileges of peerage, &c. But as soon as the king was beheaded, the lords were discarded and turned out. February the first, two days after the king's death, when the lords sent a message to the commons, for a committee to consider the way of settling the nation; the commons made an order to consider on the morrow, whether the messenger should be called in; and whether the house should take any cognizance thereof. February the fifth the lords sent again, but their messengers were not called in; and it was debated by the commons, whether the house of lords should be continued a court of judicature; and the next day it was resolved by them, that the house of peers in parliament was useless, and ought to be abolished. Whitelock.
3 After the king's party was utterly overthrown, Cromwell, who all along, as it is supposed, aimed at the supreme power, persuaded the parliament to send part of their army into Ireland, and to disband the rest: which the presbyterians in the house were forward to do. This, as he knew it would, set the army in a mutiny, which he and the rest of the commanders made shew to take indignation at. And Cromwell, to make the parliament secure, called God to witness, that he was sure the army would, at their first command, cast their arms at their feet: and again solemnly swore, that he had rather himself and his whole family should be consumed, than that the army should break out into sedition. Yet in the mean time he blew up the flame; and getting leave to go down to the army to quiet them, immediately joined with them in all their designs. By which arts he so strengthened his interest in the army, and incensed them against the parliament, that with the help of the red-coats he turned them all out of doors. Bates Elench. Mot. and others.
Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex.
And that by them th' were only meant
To serve for an expedient. 1
What was the public faith found out for,2
But to slur men of what they fought for?
The public faith, which ev'ry one
Is bound t' observe; yet kept by none;
And if that go for nothing, why
Should private faith have such a tie?
Oaths were not purpos'd more than law,
To keep the good and just in awe,3
But to confine the bad and sinful,
Like mortal cattle in a pinfold.
A saint's of th' heav'ny realm a peer;
And as no peer is bound to swear,
But on the gospel of his honour,
Of which he may dispose as owner,
It follows, tho' the thing be forgery,
And false, th' affirm it is no perjury,
But a mere ceremony, and a breach
Of nothing, but a form of speech,
And goes for no more when 'tis took,
Than mere saluting of the book.
Suppose the Scriptures are of force,
They're but commissions of course,4

1 Expedient was a term often used by the sectaries. When the members of the council of state engaged to approve of what should be done by the commons in parliament for the future, it was ordered to draw up an expedient for the members to subscribe.
2 It was usual to pledge the public faith, as they called it, by which they meant the credit of parliament, or their own promises, for monies borrowed, and many times never repaid. A remarkable answer was given to the citizens of London on some occasion: "In truth the subjects may plead the property of their goods against the king, but not against the parliament, to whom it appertains to dispose of all the goods of the kingdom." Their own partisans, Milton and Lilly, complain of not being repaid the money they had laid out to support the cause.
3 Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but "for the lawless and disobedient." 1 Timothy, i. 9.
4 A satire on the liberty the parliament officers took of varying from their commissions, on pretence of private instructions.
And saints have freedom to digress,
But vary from 'em as they please;
Or misinterpret them by private Instructions, to all aims they drive at.
Then why should we ourselves abridge,
And curtail our own privilege?
Quakers, that like to lanterns, bear
Their light within them, will not swear;
Their gospel is an accident,
By which they construe conscience, ¹
And hold no sin so deeply red
As that of breaking Priscian's head, ²
The head and founder of their order,
That stirring hats held worse than murder; ³
These thinking they're oblig'd to troth
In swearing, will not take an oath;

¹ That is, they, the quakers, interpret Scripture altogether literal, and make a point of conscience of using the wrong number in grammar: or, it may mean that grammar is their Scripture, by which they interpret right or wrong, lawful or unlawful.

² Priscian was a great grammarian about the year 528, and when any one spoke false grammar, he was said to break Priscian's head. The quakers, we know, are great sticklers for plainness and simplicity of speech. Thou is the singular, you the plural; consequently it is breaking Priscian's head, it is false grammar, quoth the quaker, to use you in the singular number: George Fox was another Priscian, witness his Battel-d'or.

³ Some think, that the order of quakers, and not Priscian, is here meant but then it would be holds, not held; I therefore am inclined to think that the poet humourously supposes that Priscian, who received so many blows on the head, was much averse to taking off his hat; and therefore calls him the founder of quakerism. This may seem a far-fetched conceit; but a similar one is employed by Mr. Butler on another occasion. "You may perceive the quaker has a crack in his skull," says he, "by the great care he takes to keep his hat on, lest his sickly brains, if he have any, should take cold." Remains. ii. 352. i. 391. April 20, 1649, nearly at the beginning of quakerism, Everard and Winstanley, chief of the levellers, came to the general, and made a large declaration to justify themselves. While they were speaking they stood with their hats on; and being demanded the reason, said, "he was but their fellow-creature," "This is set down," says Whitelocke, "because it was the beginning of the appearance of this opinion." So obstinate were the quakers in this point, that Barclay makes the following declaration concerning it: "However small or foolish this may seem, yet, I can say bold
Like mules, who if they've not the will
To keep their own pace, stand stock still;
But they are weak, and little know
What free-born consciences may do.
'Tis the temptation of the devil
That makes all human actions evil:
For saints may do the same thing by
The spirit, in sincerity,
Which other men are tempted to,
And at the devil's instance do;
And yet the actions be contrary,
Just as the saints and wicked vary.
For as on land there is no beast
But in some fish at sea's exprest; ¹
So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the saints have not a spice;
And yet that thing that's pious in
The one, in th' other is a sin. ²
Is't not ridiculous, and nonsense,
A saint should be a slave to conscience?

¹ Thus Dubartas:
So many fishes of so many features,
That in the waters we may see all creatures,
Even all that on the earth are to be found,
As if the world were in deep waters drown'd.

² Many held the antinomian principle that believers, or persons regenerate, cannot sin. Though they commit the same acts, which are styled and are sins in others, yet in them they are no sins. Because, say they, it is not the nature of the action that derives a quality upon the person; but it is the antecedent quality or condition of the person that denominates his actions, and stamps them good or bad: so that they are those only who are previously wicked, that do wicked actions; but believers, doing the very same things, never commit the same sins.
That ought to be above such fancies,
As far as above ordinances?
She’s of the wicked, as I guess,
B’ her looks, her language, and her dress:
And tho’, like constables, we search
For false wares one another’s church;
Yet all of us hold this for true,
No faith is to the wicked due.
For truth is precious and divine,
Too rich a pearl for carnal swine.
Quoth Hudibras, All this is true,
Yet ’tis not fit that all men knew
Those mysteries and revelations:
And therefore topical evasions
Of subtle turns, and shifts of sense,
Serve best with th’ wicked for pretence,
Such as the learned jesuits use,
And presbyterians, for excuse

---

1 Some sectaries, especially the muggletonians, thought themselves so sure of salvation, that they deemed it needless to conform to ordinances human or divine

2 On the subject of jesuitical evasions we may recite a story from Mr. Foulis. He tells us that, a little before the death of queen Elizabeth, when the jesuits were endeavouring to set aside king James, a little book was written, entitled, a Treatise on Equivocation, or, as it was afterwards styled by Garnet, provincial of the jesuits, a Treatise against Lying and Dissimulation, which yet allows an excuse for the most direct falsehood, by their law of directing the intention. For example, in time of the plague a man goes to Coventry; at the gates he is examined upon oath whether he came from London: the traveller, though he directly came from thence, may swear positively that he did not. The reason is, because he knows himself not infected, and does not endanger Coventry; which he supposes to answer the final intent of the demand. At the end of this book is an allowance and commendation of it by Blackwell, thus: Tractatus iste valde doctus et vere pius et catholicus est. Certe sac. scripturarum, patrum, doctorum, scholasticorum, canonistarum, et optimarum rationum praeidissime firmat equitatem equivocationis, ideoque dignissimus qui typis propagetur ad consolationem afflictorum catholicorum, et omnium piorum instructionem. Ita censeo Georgius Blackwellus archipresbiter Angliae et protonotarius apostolicus. On the second leaf it has this title: A Treatise against Lying and Fraudulent Dissimulation, newly overseen by the author, and published for the defence of Innocency,
Against the protestants, when th' happen
To find their churches taken napping:
As thus: a breach of oath is duple,
And either way admits a scruple,
And may be, ex parte of the maker,
More criminal than the injur'd taker;
For he that strains too far a vow,
Will break it, like an o'er bent bow:
And he that made, and forc'd it, broke it,
Not he that for convenience took it.
A broken oath is, quatenus oath,
As sound t' all purposes of troth,
As broken laws are ne'er the worse,
Nay, 'till they're broken, have no force.
What's justice to a man, or laws,
That never comes with in their claws?
They have no pow'r, but to admonish;
Cannot control, coerce, or punish,
Until they're broken, and then touch
Those only that do make them such.
Beside, no engagement is allow'd,
By men in prison made, for good;
For when they're set at liberty,
They're from th' engagement too set free.

and for the Instruction of Ignorats. The MS. was seized by sir Edward Coke, in sir Thomas Tresham’s chamber, in the Inner Temple, and is now in the Bodleian library, at Oxford. MS. Laud. E. 45, with the attestation in sir Edward Coke’s hand-writing, 5 December 1605, and the following motto: Os quod mentitur occidit animam. An instance of the parliamentarians shifting their sense, and explaining away their declaration, may be this: When the Scots delivered up the king to the parliament, they were promised that he should be treated with safety, liberty, and honour. But when the Scots afterwards found reason to demand the performance of that promise, they were answered, that the promise was formed, published, and employed according as the state of affairs then stood. And yet these promises to preserve the person and authority of the king had been made with the most solemn protestations. We protest, say they, in the presence of Almighty God, which is the strongest bond of a christian, and by the public faith, the most solemn that any state can give, that neither adversity nor success shall ever cause us to change our resolutions.
The rabbins write, when any jew
Did make to god or man a vow, 1
Which afterwards he found untoward,
And stubborn to be kept, or too hard;
Any three other jews o’ th’ nation
Might free him from the obligation:
And have not two saints power to use
A greater privilege than three jews? 2
The court of conscience, which in man
Should be supreme and sovereign,
Is’t fit should be subordinate
To ev’ry petty court i’ th’ state,
And have less power than the lesser,
To deal with perjury at pleasure?
Have its proceedings disallow’d, or Allow’d, at fancy of pie-powder? 3
Tell all it does, or does not know,
For swearing ex officio? 4

1 There is a traditional doctrine among the jews, that if any person has made a vow, which afterward he wishes to recall, he may go to a rabbi, or three other men, and if he can prove to them that no injury will be sustained by any one, they may free him from its obligation. See Remains, vol. i. 300.

2 Mr. Butler, told Mr. Veal, that by the two saints he meant Dr. Downing and Mr. Marshall, who, when some of the rebels had their lives spared on condition that they would not in future bear arms against the king, were sent to dispense with the oath, and persuade them to enter again into the service. Mr. Veal was a gentleman commoner of Edmund Hall during the troubles, and was about seventy years old when he gave this account to Mr. Coopey. See Godwin’s MS. notes on Grey’s Hudibras, in the Bodleian library, Oxford.

3 The court of pie-powder takes cognizance of such disputes as arise in fairs and markets; and is so called from the old French word pied-puldreaux, which signifies a pedlar, one who gets a livelihood without a fixed or certain residence. See Barrington’s Observations on the Statutes; and Blackstone’s Commentaries, vol. iii. p. 32. In the borough laws of Scotland, an alien merchant is called pied-puldreaux.

4 In some courts an oath was administered, usually called the oath ex officio, whereby the parties were obliged to answer to interrogatories, and therefore were thought to be obliged to accuse or purge themselves of any criminal matter. In the year 1604 a conference was held concerning some reforms in ecclesiastical matters when James I. presided; one of the matters complained of was the ex officio oath.
Be forc'd t' impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unrimg'd at vis. franc. pledge? 1
Discover thieves, and bawds, recusants,
Priests, witches, eves-droppers, and nuisance:
Tell who did play at games unlawful,
And who fill'd pots of ale but half-full;
And have no pow'r at all, nor shift,
To help itself at a dead lift?
Why should not conscience have vacation
As well as other courts o' th' nation?
Have equal power to adjourn,
Appoint appearance and return?
And make as nice distinctions serve
To split a case, as those that carve,
Invoking cuckold's names, hit joints? 2
Why should not tricks as slight, do points?
Is not th' high court of justice sworn
To judge that law that serves their turn? 3

The Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and the Archbishop (Whitgift) defended the oath: the king gave a description of it, laid down the grounds upon which it stood, and justified the wisdom of the constitution. For swearing ex officio, that is, by taking the ex officio oath. A further account of this oath may be seen in Neal's History of the Puritans, vol. 1. p. 444.

1 Lords of certain manors had the right of requiring surety of the freeholders for their good behaviour toward the king and his subjects: which security, taken by the steward at the lord's court, was to be exhibited to the sheriff of the county. These manors were said to have view of frank pledge.

2 Our ancestors, when they found it difficult to carve a goose, a hare, or other dish, used to say in jest, they should hit the joint if they could think of the name of a cuckold. Mr. Kyrle, the man of Ross, celebrated by Pope, had always company to dine with him on a market day, and a goose, if it could be procured, was one of the dishes; which he claimed the privilege of carving himself. When any guest, ignorant of the etiquette of the table, offered to save him that trouble, he would exclaim, "Hold your hand, man, if I am good for any thing, it is for hitting cuck-"olds joints."

3 The high court of justice was a court first instituted for the trial of king Charles I. but afterwards extended its jurisdiction to some of his adherents, to the year 1658. As it had no law or precedents to go by, its determinations were those which best served the turn of its members. See the form of the oath administered to them upon the trial of
Make their own jealousies high treason,
And fix them whomsoever they please on?
Cannot the learned counsel there
Make laws in any shape appear?
Mould 'em as witches do their clay,
When they make pictures to destroy?¹
And vex them into any form
That fits their purpose to do harm?
Rack them until they do confess,
Impeach of treason whom they please,
And most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for them?
And yet do nothing in their own sense
But what they ought by oath and conscience.
Can they not juggle, and with slight
Conveyance play with wrong and right;
And sell their blasts of wind as dear,²
As Lapland witches bottl'd air?³

¹ It was supposed that witches, by forming the image of any one in wax or clay, and sticking it with pins, or putting it to other torture, could annoy also the prototype or person represented. According to Dr. Dee such enchantments were used against queen Elizabeth. Elinor Cobham employed them against Henry VI. and Amy Simpson against James VI. of Scotland. A criminal process was issued against Robert of Artois, who coutrived the figure of a young man in wax, and declared it was made against John of France, the king's son: he added, that he would have another figure of a woman, not baptized, against a she-devil, the queen. Monsieur de Laverdis observes, that the spirit of superstition had persuaded people, that figures of wax baptized, and pierced for several days to the heart, brought about the death of the person against whom they were intended. Account of MSS. in the French king's library, 1789. vol. ii. p. 404.
² That is, their breath, their pleading, their arguments.
³ The witches in Lapland pretended to sell bags of wind to the sailors, which would carry them to whatever quarter they pleased. See Olaus Magnus. Cleveland, in his King's Disguise, p. 61:
The Laplanders when they would sell a wind
Wafting to hell, bag up thy phrase and bind
It to the barque, which at the voyage end
Shifts poop, and breeds the collick in the fiend.
Will not fear, favour, bribe, and grudge,
The same case sev'ral ways adjudge?
As seamen, with the self-same gale,
Will sev'ral different courses sail;
As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
Those banks and dams, that, like a screen,
Did keep it out, now keep it in;
So when tyranical usurpation
Invades the freedom of a nation,
The laws o' th' land that were intended
To keep it out, are made defend it.
Does not in chanc'ry ev'ry man swear
What makes best for him in his answer?
Is not the winding up witnesses,
And nicking, more than half the bus'ness?
For witnesses, like watches, go
Just as they're set, too fast or slow;
And where in conscience they're strait lac'd,
'Tis ten to one that side is cast.
Do not your juries give their verdict
As if they felt the cause, not heard it?
And as they please make matter o' fact
Run all on one side as they're packt?
Nature has made man's breast no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;

1 This simile may be found in prose in Butler's Remains, vol. i. p. 298, "For as when the sea breaks over its bounds, and overflows the land, "those dams and banks that were made to keep it out, do afterwards "serve to keep it in; so when tyranny and usurpation break in upon "the common right and freedom, the laws of God and of the land are "abused, to support that which they were intended to oppose."

2 Momus is said to have found fault with the frame of man, because there were no doors nor windows in his breast, through which his thoughts might be discovered. See an ingenious paper on this subject in the Guardian, vol. ii. No. 106. Mr. Butler spells windore in the same manner where it does not rhyme. Perhaps he thought that the etymology of the word was wind-door.
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it.
If oaths can do a man no good
In his own bus'ness, why they shou'd,
In other matters, do him hurt,
I think there's little reason for't.
He that imposes an oath makes it,
Not he that for convenience takes it:
Then how can any man be said
To break an oath he never made?
These reasons may perhaps look oddly
To th' wicked, tho' they evince the godly;
But if they will not serve to clear
My honour, I am ne'er the near.
Honour is like that glassy bubble,
That finds philosopher such trouble;
Whose least part crack'd, the whole does fly,
And wits are crack'd to find out why.

---

1 The drop, or bubble, mentioned in this simile, is made of ordinary glass, of the shape and about twice the size described in the margin. It is nearly solid. The thick part, at D or E, will bear the stroke of a hammer; but if you break off the top in the slender and sloping part at B or C, the whole will burst with a noise, and be blown about in powder to a considerable distance. The first establishers of the Royal Society, and many philosophers in various parts of Europe, found it difficult to explain this phenomenon. Monsieur Rohalt, in his Physics, calls it a kind of a miracle in nature, and says, (part i. c. xxii. §. 47.) "Ed. Clarke lately discovered, and brought it hither from Holland, and which has travelled through all the universities, in Europe, where it has raised the curiosity, and confounded the reason of the greatest part of the philosophers:" he accounts for it in the following manner. He says, that the drop, when taken hot from the fire, is suddenly immersed in some appropriate liquor (cold water he thinks will break it) * by which means the pores on the outside are closed, and the substance of the glass condensed; while the inside, not cooling so fast, the pores are left wider and wider from the surface to the middle: so that the air being let in, and finding no passage, bursts it to pieces. To prove the truth of this explication, he observes, that if you break off the very point of it at A, the drop will not burst; because that part being very slender, it was cooled all at once,

* Here he is mistaken
Quoth Ralpho, Honour's but a word,
To swear by only in a lord: 1
In other men 'tis but a huff
To vapour with, instead of proof;
That like a wen, looks big and swells,
Insenseless, and just nothing else.
   Let it, quoth he, be what it will,
It has the world's opinion still
But as men are not wise that run
The slightest hazard, they may shun,
There may a medium be found out
To clear to all the world the doubt;
And that is, if a man may do't,
By proxy whipp'd, or substitute. 2

Though nice and dark the point appear,
Quoth Ralph, it may hold up and clear.
That sinners may supply the place
Of suffering saints, is a plain case.
Justice gives sentence, many times,
On one man for another's crimes.
Our brethren, of New England use
Choice malefactors to excuse, 3 the pores were equally closed, and there is no passage for the air into the wider pores below. If you heat the drop again in the fire, and let it cool gradually, the outer pores will be opened, and made as large as the inner, and then, in whatever part you break it, there will be no bursting.

He gave three of the drops to three several jewelers, to be drilled or filed at C D and E, but when 'they had worked them a little way, that is, beyond the pores which were closed, they all burst to powder.
1 Lords, when they give judgement, are not sworn: they say only upon my honour.
2 Mr. Murray, of the bed-chamber, was whipping boy to king Charles
I. Burnet's History of his own Times, vol. i. p 244.
3 This story is asserted to be true, in the notes subjoined by Mr. Butler to the early editions. A similar one is related by Dr. Grey, from Morton's English Canaan, printed 1637. A lusty young fellow was condemned to be hanged for stealing corn; but it was proposed in council to execute a bed-rid old man in the offender's clothes, which would satisfy appearances, and preserve an useful member to society.
Dr. Grey mentions likewise a letter from the committee of Stafford to And hang the guiltless in their stead;
Of whom the churches have less need.
As lately 't happen'd: in a town
There liv'd a coblcr, and but one,
That out of doctrine could cut use,
And mend men's lives as well as shoes.
This precious brother having slain,
In times of peace, an Indian,
Not out of malice, but mere zeal,
Because he was an infidel,
The mighty Tottipottomoy
Sent to our elders an envoy,
Complaining sorely of the breach
Of league, held forth by brother Patch,
Against the articles in force
Between both churches, his and ours;
For which he crav'd the saints to render
Into his hands, or hang th' offender:
But they maturely having weigh'd
They had no more but him o' th' trade,
A man that serv'd them in a double
Capacity, to teach and coblle,
Resolv'd to spare him: yet to do
The Indian Hoghan Moghan too
Impartial justice, in his stead did
Hang an old weaver that was bed-rid:

Speaker Lenthall, dated Aug. 5, 1645, desiring a respite for Henry Steward, a soldier under the governor of Hartlebury castle, and offering two Irishmen to be executed in his stead. Ralpho calls them his brethren of New England, because the inhabitants there were generally independents. In the ecclesiastical constitution of that province, modelled according to Robinson's platform, there was a co-ordination of churches, not a subordination of one to another. John de Lact says, primos colonos, uti et illos qui postea accesserunt, potissimum aut omnino fusse ex eorum hominum secta, quos in Anglia Brownistas et puritanos vocant.

1 I don't know whether this was a real name, or an imitation only of North American phraseology: the appellation of an individual, or a title of office.
Then wherefore may not you be skipp'd,
And in your room another whipp'd?
For all philosophers, but the sceptic,
Hold whipping may be sympathetic.

It is enough, quoth Hudibras,
Thou hast resolv'd, and clear'd the case;
And canst, in conscience, not refuse,
From thy own doctrine, to raise use:
I know thou wilt not, for my sake,
Be tender-conscienc'd of thy back:
Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a ferking;
For when thy vessel is new hoop'd,
All leaks of sinning will be stopp'd.

But Ralpho, You mistake the matter,
For in all scruples of this nature,
No man includes himself, nor turns
The point upon his own concerns.
As no man of his own self catches
The itch, or amorous French aches;
So no man does himself convince,
By his own doctrine, of his sins:
And though all cry down self, none means
His own self in a literal sense:
Besides, it is not only foppish,
But vile, idolatrous, and popish,
For one man out of his own skin
To frisk and whip another's sin;
As pedants out of school boys' breeches
Do claw and curry their own itches.
But in this case it is profane,
And sinful too, because in vain;

1 The sceptics held that there was no certainty of sense; and consequently that men did not always know when they felt any thing.
2 A favourite expression of the sectaries of those days.
3 A banter on the popish doctrine of satisfactions.
For we must take our oaths upon it
You did the deed, when I have done it.
Quoth Hudibras, That's answer'd soon;
Give us the whip, we'll lay it on.
Quoth Ralpho, That you may swear true,
'Twere properer that I whipp'd you;
For when with your consent 'tis done,
The act is really your own.
Quoth Hudibras, It is in vain,
I see, to argue 'gainst the grain;
Or, like the stars, incline men to
What they're averse themselves to do:
For when disputes are weary'd out,
'Tis interest still resolves the doubt:
But since no reason can confute ye,
I'll try to force you to your duty;
For so it is, howe'er you mince it;
As, e'er we part, I shall evince it,
And curry, 1 if you stand out, whether
You will or no, your stubborn leather.
Canst thou refuse to bear thy part
I' th' public work, base as thou art?
To higgle thus, for a few blows,
To gain thy Knight an op' lent spouse,
Whose wealth his bowels yearn to purchase,
Merely for th' int'rest of the churches?
And when he has it in his claws,
Will not be hide-bound to the cause:
Nor shalt thou find him a curmudgin, 2
If thou dispatch it without grudging:
If not, resolve, before we go,
That you and I must pull a crow.

1 Coria perficere: or it may be derived from the Welsh kuro, to beat or pound. This scene is taken from Don Quixote.
2 Perhaps from the French cœur mechant.
BISHOP EDMUND BONNER.
From a Copper Plate.
Ye 'ad best, quoth Ralpho, as the ancients
Say wisely, have a care o' th' main chance,
And look before you, ere you leap;
For as you sow, y'are like to reap:
And were y' as good as George-a-green, ¹
I should make bold to turn agen;
Nor am I doubtful of the issue
In a just quarrel, as mine is so.
Is 't fitting for a man of honour
To whip the saints, like Bishop Bonner? ²
A knight t' usurp the beadle's office,
For which y' are like to raise brave trophies?
But I advise you, not for fear,
But for you own sake, to forbear;
And for the churches, ³ which may chance
From hence, to spring a variance,
And raise among themselves new scruples,
Whom common danger hardly couples,
Remember how in arms and politics,
We still have worsted all your holy tricks; ⁴
Trepann'd your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg;
New-modell'd the army, and cashier'd
All that to Legion Smec adher'd;

¹ A valiant hero, perhaps an outlaw, in the time of Richard the first, who conquered Robin Hood and Little John. He is the same with the Pinder of Wakefield. See Echard's History of England, vol. p. i. 226. The Old Ballads; Ben Jonson's play of the sad Shepherd; and Sir John Suckling's Poems.
² Bishop of London in the reign of queen Mary: a man of profligate manners and of brutal character. He sometimes whipped the protestants, who where in custody, with his own hands, till he was tired with the violence of the exercise. Hume's History of Mary, p. 378. Fox, Acts and Monuments, ed. 1576. p. 1937.
³ It was very common for the sectaries of those days, however attentive they might be to their own interest, to pretend that they had nothing in view but the welfare of the churches.
⁴ The independents and anabaptists got the army on their side, and overpowered the presbyterians.
Made a mere utensil o' your church,
And after left it in the lurch;
A scaffold to build up our own,
And when w' had done with 't, pull'd it down;
O'er-reach'd your rabbins of the synod,
And snapp'd their canons with a why-not:
Grave synod-men, that were rever'd
For solid face, and depth of beard,
Their classic model prov'd a maggot,
And drown'd their discipline like a kitten,
On which they 'd been so long a sitting;
Decry'd it as a holy cheat.
Grown out of date, and obsolete.
And all the saints of the first grass,
As casting foals of Balaam's ass.
At this the Knight grew high in chafe,
And staring furiously on Ralph,
He trembl'd, and look'd pale with ire,
Like ashes first, then red as fire.
Have I, quoth he, been ta'en in fight,
And for so many moons lain by 't,
And when all other means did fail,
Have been exchans'd for tubs of ale?

1 Some editions read, "capoch'd your rabbins," that is, blindfolded; but this word does not agree so well with the Squire's simplicity of expression. Why-not is a facetious term used in Butler's Remains, vol. i. p. 178. it signifies the obliging a man to yield his assent: the driving him to a non plus, when he knows not what to answer. It may resemble quidni in Latin, and τί μην in Greek.

2 The directory was a book drawn up by the assembly of divines, and published by authority of parliament, containing instructions to their ministers for the regulation of public worship. One of the scribes to the assembly, who executed a great part of the work, was Adoniram Byfield, said to have been a broken apothecary. He was the father of Byfield, the salvolatile doctor.

3 The presbyterians, the first sectaries that sprang up and opposed the established church.

4 Talibus exarsit dictis violentia Turni.

5 Mr. Butler, in his own note on these lines, says, "The knight was kept prisoner in Exeter, and after several changes proposed, but none
Not but they thought me worth a ransom,
Much more consid’rable and handsome;
But for their own sakes, and for fear
They were not safe, when I was there;
Now to be baffled by a scoundrel,
An upstart sect’ry, and a mungrel, ¹
Such as breed out of peccant humours
Of our own church, like wens or tumours,
And like a maggot in a sore,
Wou’d that which gave it life devour;
It never shall be done or said:
With that he seized upon his blade;
And Ralpho too, as quick and bold,
Upon his basket-hilt laid hold,
With equal readiness prepar’d,
To draw and stand upon his guard;
When both were parted on the sudden,
With hideous clamour, and a loud one,
As if all sorts of noise had been Contracted into one loud din;
Or that some member to be chosen,
Had got the odds above a thousand;
And, by the greatness of his noise,
Prov’d fittest for his country’s choice.
This strange surprisal put the Knight
And wrathful Squire, into a fright;
And tho’ they stood prepar’d, with fatal
Impetuous rancour to join battle,
Both thought it was the wisest course
To wave the fight, and mount to horse;

¹ Knights errant sometimes condescended to address their squires in this polite language. Thus Don Quixote to Sancho: “How now, opprobrious rascal! stinking garlic-eater! sirrah, I will take you and tie your dogship to a tree, as naked as your mother bore you.”
And to secure, by swift retreating,
Themselves from danger of worse beating;
Yet neither of them would disparage,
By utfring of his mind, his courage,
Which made them stoutly keep their ground,
With horror and disdain wind-bound.
And now the cause of all their fear
By slow degrees approach’d so near,
They might distinguish different noise
Of horns, and pans, and dogs, and boys,
And kettle-drums, whose sullen dub
Sounds like the hooping of a tub:
But when the sight appear’d in view,
They found it was an antique shew;
A triumph, that for pomp and state,
Did proudest Romans emulate:
For as the aldermen of Rome
Their foes at training overcome,
And not enlarging territory,
As some, mistaken, write in story,
Being mounted in their best array,
Upon a car, and who but they?

1 The poet does not suffer his heroes to proceed to open violence; but ingeniously puts an end to the dispute, by introducing them to a new adventure. The drollery of the following scene is inimitable.
2 The skimmington, or procession, to exhibit a woman who had beaten her husband, is humorously compared to a Roman triumph; the learned reader will be pleased by comparing this description with the pompous account of Æmilius's triumph, as described by Plutarch, and the satirical one, as given by Juvenal in his tenth satire.
3 The buildings at Rome were sometimes extended without the ceremony of describing a pomerium, which Tacitus and Gellius declare no person to have had a right of extending, but such a one as has had taken away some part of the enemy’s country in war; perhaps line 596 may allude to the London trained bands. Our poet's learning and ideas here crowd upon him so fast, that he seems to confound together the ceremonies of enlarging the pomerium, of a triumph at Rome, and other ceremonies, with a lord mayor's show, exercising the train bands, and perhaps a borough election.
And follow'd with a world of tall lads,
That merry ditties troll'd, and ballads,
Did ride with many a good-morrow,
Crying, hey for our town, thro' the borough;
So when this triumph drew so nigh,
They might particulars desery,
They never saw two things so pat,
In all respects, as this and that.
First he that led the cavalcate,
Wore a sow-gelder's flagellet,
On which he blew as strong a levet,
As well-feed lawyer on his brev'ate,
When over one another's heads
They charge, three ranks at once, like Sweeds:
Next pans and kettles of all keys,
From trebles down to double base;
And after them upon a nag,
That might pass for a fore-hand stag,
A cornet rode, and on his staff,
A smock display'd did proudly wave.
Then bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones;
Whose blasts of air in pockets shut,
Sound filthier than from the gut,

1 The vulgar, and the soldiers themselves had at triumphal processions the liberty of abusing their general. Their invectives were commonly conveyed in metre.

Ecce Cæsar nunc triumphant, qui subegit Gallias.
Nicomedes non triumphant, qui subegit Cæsarem.
Suétionius in Julio, 49.

2 Levet is a lesson on the trumpet, sounded morning and evening, Mr. Bacon says, on shipboard. It is derived from the French reveiller, a term used for the morning trumpet among the dragoons.

3 This and the preceding lines were added by the author in 1674. He has departed from the common method of spelling the word Swedes for the sake of rhyme; in the edition of 1689, after his death, it was printed Sweeds. The Swedes appear to have been the first that practised firing by two or three ranks at a time: see Sir Robert Monro's Memoirs, and Bariff's Young Artillery-man. Mr. Cleveland, speaking of the authors of the Diurnal, says, "they write in the posture that the "Swedes give fire in, over one another's heads."
And make a viler noise than swine
In windy weather, when they whine.
Next one upon a pair of panniers,
Full fraught with that which, for good manners,
Shall here be nameless, mix'd with grains,
Which he dispenses among the swains,
And busily upon the crowd
At random round about bestow'd.
Then mounted on a horned horse,
One bore a gauntlet and gilt spurs,
Ty'd to the pummel of a long sword
He held revers'd, the point turn'd downward.
Next after, on a raw-bon'd steed,
The conqueror's standard-bearer rid,
And bore aloft before the champion
A petticoat display'd, and rampant;
Near whom the Amazon triumphant,
Bestrid her beast, and on the rump ont's
Set face to tail, and bum to bum,
The warrior whilom overcome;
Arm'd with a spindle and a distaff,
Which, as he rode, she made him twist off;
And when he loiter'd, o'er her shoulder
Chastised the reformado soldier.
Before the dame, and round about,
March'd whifflers, and staffiers on foot,

---

1 Alluding to the terms in which heralds blazon coats of arms.
2 "A mighty whifler." See Shakspere's Henry V. Act v. and Hanmer's note. Vileur, in lord Herbert's Henry VIII. Staffier, from estaffete, a courier or express. [Mr. Douce in his Illustrations of Shakspere, vol. i. p. 506, says: "Some errors have crept into the remarks on this word which require correction. It is by no means, as Hanmer had conceived, a corruption from the French huissier. He was apparently misled by the resemblance which the office of a whifller bore in modern times to that of an usher. The term is undoubtedly borrowed from whiffe, another name for a fife or small flute; for whifflers were originally those who preceded armies or processions as fifers or pipers. Representations of them occur among the prints of the magnificent triumph of Maximilian I. In a note on Othello,
With lackies, grooms, valets, and pages,
In fit and proper equipages;
Of whom some torches bore, some links,
Before the proud virago-minx,
That was both madam and a don,
Like Nero's Sporus, or pope Joan;
And at fit periods the whole rout
Set up their throats with clam'rous shout.
The knight transported, and the squire,
Put up their weapons and their ire;
And Hudibras, who us'd to ponder
On such sights with judicious wonder.
Could hold no longer, to impart
His animadversions, for his heart.
Quoth he, In all my life till now,
I ne'er saw so profane a show;
It is a paganish invention,
Which heathen writers often mention:
And he, who made it, had read Goodwin,
I warrant him, and understood him:

"Act iii. sc. iii. Mr. Warton had supposed that whiffler came from "what he calls, 'the old French vigfleur;' but it is presumed that that "language does not supply any such word, and that the use of it in "the quotation from Rymer's fiedera is nothing more than a vitiated "orthography. In process of time the term whiffler, which had always "been used in the sense of a fifer, came to signify any person who went "before in a procession. Minshew, in his Dictionary, 1617, defines "him to be a club or staff-bearer."

Mr. Douce has not afforded us an instance of whiffler used as a fiser.
Warton carries up the use of the word as an huissier to 1554, and certainly Shakspeare could have had no idea of its piping meaning when he wrote:

"Behold, the English beach
"Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys,
"Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep mouth'd sea,
"Which, like a mighty whiffler 'fore the king,
"Seems to prepare his way:"

The whifflers who now attend the London companies in processions are freemen carrying staves."

1 A mistress and a master.
2 See Suetonius, in the life of Nero.
With all the Grecian Speeds and Stows,\(^1\) That best describe those ancient shows; And has observ'd all fit decorums We find describ'd by old historians:\(^2\) For, as the Roman conqueror, That put an end to foreign war, Ent'ring the town in triumph for it, Bore a slave with him in his chariot;\(^3\) So this insulting female brave Carries behind her here a slave: And as the ancients long ago, When they in field defy'd the foe, Hung out their mantles della guerre,\(^4\) So her proud standard-bearer here, Waves on his spear, in dreadful manner, A Tyrian petticoat for banner. Next links and torches, heretofore Still borne before the emperor:

---

\(^1\) Speed and Stowe wrote chronicles or annals of England, and are well known English antiquaries. By Grecian Speeds and Stows, he means, any ancient authors who have explained the antiquities and customs of Greece: the titles of such books were often, τὰ παραδό, of such a district or city. Thus Dicæarchus wrote a book entitled, περὶ τοῦ κής Ἑλλάδος βιοῦ, wherein he gave the description of Greece, and of the laws and customs of the Grecians: our poet likewise might allude to Pausanias.

\(^2\) The reader will, perhaps, think this an awkward rhyme; but the very ingenious and accurate critic, Dr. Loveday, to whom, as well as to his learned father, I cannot too often repeat my acknowledgments, observes in a letter with which he honoured me, that in English, to a vulgar ear, unacquainted with critical disquisitions on sounds, m and n sound alike. So the old sayings, among the common people taken for rhyme:

A stich in time
Saves nine.
Tread on a worm,
And it will turn.

Frequent instances of the propriety of this remark occur in Hudibras; for example: men and them, exempt and innocent.

\(^3\) — curru servus portatur eodem. Juv. Sat. x. 42.

\(^4\) Tunica coccinea solebat pridie quam dimicandum esset supra praetorium poni, quasi admonitio et indicium future pugnae. Lipsius in Tacit.
And, as in antique triumphs, eggs
Were borne for mystical intrigues; ¹
There’s one, with truncheon, like a ladle,
That carries eggs too, fresh or adle:
And still at random, as he goes,
Among the rabble-rout bestows.

Quoth Ralpho, You mistake the matter;
For all th’ antiquity you smatter
Is but a riding us’d of course,
When the grey mare’s the better horse;
When o’er the breeches greedy women
Fight, to extend their vast dominion,
And in the cause impatient Grizel
Has drubb’d her husband with bull’s pizzle,
And brought him under covert-baron,
To turn her vassal with a murrain;
When wives their sexes shift, like hares,²
And ride their husbands like night-mares;
And they, in mortal battle vanquish’d,
Are of their charter disenfranchis’d,
And by the right of war, like gills,³
Condemn’d to distaff, horns, and wheels:

¹ In the orgies of Bacchus, and the games of Ceres, eggs were carried, and had a mystical import. See Banier, vol. i. b. ii. c. 5. and Rosinus, lib. v. c. 14. Pompa producebatur cum deorum signis et ovo. In some editions it is printed antick, and means mimic.

² Many have been the vulgar errors concerning the sexes and copulation of hares: but they being of a very timid and modest nature, seldom couple but in the night. It is said that the doe hares have tumours in the groin, like the castor, and that the buck hares have cavities like the hyena. Besides, they are said to be retromingent, which occasioned the vulgar to make a confusion in the sexes. When huntsmen are better anatomists and philosophers, we shall know more of this matter. See Brown’s Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17. But our poet here chiefly means to ridicule Dr. Bulwer’s Artificial Changeling, p. 407., who mentions the female patriarch of Greece, and pope Joan of Rome, and likewise the boy Sporus, who was married to the emperor Nero: upon which it was justly said by some, that it had been happy for the empire, if Domitius, his father, had had none other but such a wife. See what Herodotus says, concerning the men of Scythia, in his Thalía.

³ Gill, scortillum, a common woman: in the Scots and Irish dialect
For when men by their wives are cow'd,
Their horns of course are understood.

Quoth Hudibras, Thou still giv'st sentence
Impertinently, and against sense:
'Tis not the least disparagement
To be defeated by th' event,
Nor to be beaten by main force;
That does not make a man the worse,
Altho' his shoulders, with battoon,
Be claw'd, and cudgell'd to some tune;
A tailor's prentice has no hard
Measure, that's bang'd with a true yard;
But to turn tail, or run away,
And without blows give up the day;
Or to surrender ere the assault,
That's no man's fortune, but his fault;
And renders men of honour less
Than all th' adversity of success;
And only unto such this shew
Of horns and petticoats is due.

There is a lesser profanation,
Like that the Romans call'd ovation:
For as ovation was allow'd
For conquest purchas'd without blood;
So men decree those lesser shows
For vict'ry gotten without blows,
By dint of sharp hard words, which some Give battle with, and overcome;

a girl; there never was a Jack but there was a Gill. See Kelly's Scotch Proverbs, page 316. See also Chaucer's Miller's Tale, and Gower, Confess. Amant. and G. Douglas's Prologue, page 452.

1 At the greater triumph the Romans sacrificed an ox; at the lesser a sheep. Hence the name ovation. Plutarch, in the life of Marcellus, "Ovandi, ac non triumphandi causa est, quam aut bella non rite indicta que cum justo hoste gesta sunt; aut hostium nomen humile et non idoneum est, ut servorum, piratarumque; aut deditione repente facta, impulverca, ut dici solet, incruentaque victoria obvenit." Aulus Gellius, v. 6.
These mounted in a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side,
And o'er the waves in triumph ride;
Like dukes of Venice, who are said
The Adriatic sea to wed;
And have a gentler wife than those
For whom the state decrees those shows.
But both are heathenish, and come
From th' whores of Babylon and Rome,
And by the saints should be withstood,
As antichristian and lewd;
And we, as such should now contribute
Our utmost strugglings to prohibit.
This said, they both advanc'd, and rode
A dog-trot through the bawling crowd
'T attack the leader, and still prest
'Till they approach'd him breast to breast:
Then Hudibras, with face and hand,
Made signs for silence; which obtain'd,
What means, quoth he, this devil's procession
With men of orthodox profession?
'Tis ethnique and idolatrous,
From heathenism deriv'd to us.

1 The custom of ducking a scolding woman in the water, was common in many places. I remember to have seen a stool of this kind near the bridge at Evesham in Worcestershire, not above eight miles from Strensham, the place of our poet's birth. The etymology of the term I know not: some suppose it should be written choking-stool, others ducking-stool, and others derive it from the French, coquine.
2 This ceremony is performed on Ascension-day. The doge throws a ring into the sea, and repeats the words, "Desponsamus te, mare, in signum veri et perpetui dominii."
3 Than the Roman worthies, who were honoured with ovations. Mr. Butler intimates that the sea is less terrible than a scolding wife.
4 Ergo, ubi commota fervet plebeula bile,
Fert animus calidæ fecisse silentia turbæ
Majestate manus.
Does not the whore of Bab’lon ride
Upon her horned beast astride,¹
Like this proud dame, who either is
A type of her, or she of this?
Are things of superstitious function,
Fit to be us’d in gospel sun-shine?
It is an antichristian opera
Much us’d in midnight times of popery;
A running after self-inventions
Of wicked and profane intentions;
To scandalize that sex for scolding,
To whom the saints are so beholden.
Women, who were our first apostles,²
Without whose aid w’ had all been lost else;
Women, that left no stone unturn’d
In which the cause might be concern’d;
Brought in their children’s spoons and whistles,³
To purchase swords, carabines, and pistols:
Their husbands, cullies, and sweethearts,
To take the saints and churches parts;

¹ See Revelation, xvii. 3.
² The author of the Ladies’ Calling observes, in his preface, “it is a memorable attestation Christ gives to the piety of women, by making them the first witnesses of his resurrection, the prime evangelists to proclaim these glad tidings; and, as a learned man speaks, apostles ‘to the apostles.” Some of the Scotch historians maintain, that Ireland received Christianity from a Scotch woman, who first instructed a queen there. But our poet, I suppose, alludes to the zeal which the ladies shewed for the good cause. The case of Lady Monson was mentioned above. The women and children worked with their own hands, in fortifying the city of London, and other towns. The women of the city went by companies to fill up the quarries in the great park, that they might not harbour an enemy; and being called together with a drum, marched into the park with mattocks and spades. Annals of Coventry,
MS. 1643.
³ In the reign of Richard II. A. D. 1382, Henry le Spencer, bishop of Norwich, set up the cross, and made a collection to support the cause of the enemies of pope Clement. Collegerat dictus episcopus innumerabilem et incredibilem summam pecuniae auri et argenti, atque jocalium, monillum, annulorum, discorum, peciarum, cocliarium, et aliorum ornamentorum, et praecipe de dominabus et aliis mulieribus. Decem Scriptores, p. 1671. See also South, v. 33.
Drew several gifted brethren in,
That for the bishops would have been,
And fix'd them constant to the party,
With motives powerful and hearty:
Their husbands robb'd and made hard shifts
'T' administer unto their gifts
All they could rap, and rend, and pilfer,
To scraps and ends of gold and silver;
Rubb'd down the teachers, tir'd and spent
With holding forth for parliament;
Pamper'd and edify'd their zeal
With marrow puddings many a meal:
Enabled them, with store of meat,
On controverted points to eat;
And cramm'd them till theirs guts did ache,
With cauldle, custard, and plumb-cake.
What have they done, or what left undone,
That might advance the cause at London?
March'd rank and file, with drum and ensign,
T' entrench the city for defence in:
Rais'd rampires with their own soft hands,
To put the enemy to stands;

1 Thus, A. Cowley, in his Puritan and Papist:
She that can rob her husband, to repair
A budget priest that noses a long prayer.

2 Dr. Echard in his Works, says of the preachers of those times—
"coiners of new phrases, drawers out of long godly words, thick
"pourers out of texts of Scripture, mimical squeakers and bellowers,
"vain glorious admirers only of themselves, and those of their own
"fashioned face and gesture: such as these shall be followed, shall have "their bushels of China oranges, shall be solaced with all manner of "cordial essences, and shall be rubb'd down with Holland of ten
"shillings an ell."

3 That is, to eat plentifully of such dainties, of which they would sometimes controvert the lawfulness to eat at all. See P. i. c. i. v.
225. and the following lines. Mr. Bacon would read the last word

4 When London was expected to be attacked, and in several sieges during the civil war, the women, and even the ladies of rank and fortune, not only encouraged the men, but worked with their own hands.
Lady Middlesex, lady Foster, lady Anne Waller, and Mrs. Dunch, have
From ladies down to oyster-wenches
Labour'd like pioneers in trenches,
Fell to their pick-axes, and tools,
And help'd the men to dig like moles?
Have not the handmaids of the city
Chose of their members a committee,
For raising of a common purse,
Out of their wages, to raise horse?
And do they not as triers sit,
To judge what officers are fit?
Have they———At that an egg let fly,
Hit him directly o'er the eye,
And running down his cheek, besmear'd,
With orange-tawny slime, his beard;
But beard and slime being of one hue,
The wound the less appear'd in view.
Then he that on the panniers rode,
Let fly on th' other side a load,
And quickly charg'd again, gave fully,
In Ralpho's face, another volley.
The knight was startled with the smell,
And for his sword began to feel;
And Ralpho smother'd with the stink,
Grasp'd his, when one that bore a link,
O' the sudden clapp'd his flaming cudgel,
Like linstock, to the horse's touch-hole; 2
And straight another, with his flambeau,
Gave Ralpho, o'er the eyes, a damn'd blow.

been particularly celebrated for their activity. The knight's learned harangue is here archly interrupted by the manual wit of one who hits him in the eye with a rotten egg.

1 Bottom, the weaver, might have suggested this epithet, who asks, in what beard shall he play the part of Pyramus? "whether in a perfect yellow beard, an orange-tawny beard, or a purple-in-grain beard."

2 Linstock is a German word, signifying the rod of wood or iron, with a match at the end of it, used by gunners in firing cannon. See P. i. c. ii v. 843.
The beasts began to kick and fling,
And forc'd the rout to make a ring;
Thro' which they quickly broke their way,
And brought them off from further fray;
And tho' disorder'd in retreat,
Each of them stoutly kept his seat;
For quitting both their swords and reins,
They grasp'd with all there strength the manes;
And, to avoid the foe's pursuit,
With spurring put their cattle to't,
And till all four were out of wind,
And danger too, ne'er look'd behind. 1
After they' ad paus'd a while, supplying
Their spirits, spent with fight and flying,
And Hudibras recruited force
Of lungs, for actions or discourse.

Quoth he, That man is sure to lose
That fouls his hands with dirty foes:
For where no honour's to be gain'd,
'Tis thrown away in being maintain'd:
'Twas ill for us, we had to do
With so dishon'able a foe:
For tho' the law of arms doth bar
The use of venom'd shot in war, 2
Yet by the nauseous smell, and noisome,
Their case-shot savours strong of poison;
And, doubtless, have been chew'd with teeth
Of some that had a stinking breath;
Else when we put it to the push,
They had not giv'n us such a brush:

1 Probably a sneer upon the Earl of Argyll, who more than once fled from Montrose and never looked behind till he was out of danger, as at Inverary, Innerlochy, and Kilsyth, and in like manner from Monro at Sterling Bridge.
2 "Abusive language, and fustian, are as unfair in controversy as "poisoned arrows or chewed bullets in battle."
But as those poltroons that fling dirt,
Do but defile, but cannot hurt;
So all the honour they have won,
Or we have lost, is much at one.
'Twas well we made so resolute
A brave retreat, without pursuit;
For if we had not, we had sped
Much worse, to be in triumph led;
Than which the ancients held no state
Of man's life more unfortunate.
But if this bold adventure e'er
Do chance to reach the widow's ear,
It may, being destin'd to assert
Her sex's honour, reach her heart:
And as such homely treats, they say,
Portend good fortune, \(^1\) so this may.
Vespasian being daub'd with dirt
Was destin'd to the empire for't; \(^2\)
And from a scavenger did come
To be a mighty prince in Rome:

---

\(^1\) The original of the coarse proverb here alluded to was the glorious battle of Azincourt, when the English were so afflicted with the dysentery that most of them chose to fight naked from the girdle downward.

\(^2\) Suetonius, in the life of Vespasian, sect. v. says, "Cum aedilcn cum C. Cæsar (i. e. Caligula) succensens, luto jussisset oppleri, consgesto per milites in praetextæ sinum; non defuerunt qui interpretarent, quandoque proculcatam desertamque rempublicam civili ali qua perturbatione in tutelam ejus, ac velut in gremium deventuram." But Dio Cassius, with all his superstition, acknowledges that the secret meaning of the circumstance was not discovered till after the event.

Mr. Butler might here allude to a story which has been told of Oliver Cromwell, afterward lord protector. When young, he was invited by sir Oliver Cromwell, his uncle and god-father, to a feast at Christmas; and, indulging his love for fun, he went to the ball with his hands and clothes besmeared with excrement, to the great disgust of the company: for which the master of misrule, or master of the ceremonies as he is now called, ordered him to be ducked in the horsepond. Memoirs of the Cromwell Family by Mark Noble, vol. i. p. 98. and Bate's Elench. motuum.
And why may not this foul address
Presage in love the same success?
Then let us straight, to cleanse our wounds,
Advance in quest of nearest ponds;
And after, as we first design'd,
Swear I've perform'd what she enjoin'd.